ancestors down to the nineteenth century, when from every nation on earth, from every quarter of the globe, from every land, from every country was represented a pure type of humanity, and human form and human mind. Never having heard of this Christ or this Saviour of the Jews, what followed? That Deity or God is his divine creations outworked to mankind and to worlds form, attributes, governments and powers adapted to their position and to their development; that nought had been made in vain; that the developments of the Hindoos, the Heathen idolater, were just as essential in God's sight as were the developments of Christianity. That they presented to Him one phase of his great and eternal laws; and from the Adam and Eve of the Heathen nations had descended a religion, a religion as sincere, perhaps, not so holy, perhaps not as lofty, perhaps not as intelligent as the Christian; but one which was calculated to give them the idea of worship, and until progress, advancement, civilization came, it answered their purpose. It caused them to acknowledge the superior power of some controlling mind, some eternal law. Then Jesus of Nazareth was a divine and a human being; was a godly being, inasmuch as his thoughts, principles, actions, life, were godly; was a human being inasmuch as his form, his brain, his general conformation were human; was both divine and human, inasmuch as he was the era of a spiritual development. He was the revolution, he was the light, he was the morning after the darkness, after ignorance and crime. He was the national of the Adam principle—the divine power of love and of beauty. He was the presentation of that wisdom and love combined. First love and then wisdom.

The lady continued, at some length, to deal with the subject in the manner indicated by the line of argument thus far reproduced.

The same modes of expression, peculiarities of style, anomalous grammatical construction, and singular logical display for in what we have given of what she said, her words are exactly followed; were indulged in until the end. In dealing with the question as to the cause of the germination of seeds, she assigned the phenomenon to a sort of passional attraction between the chemical elements of the seed of the future plant and the same elements as existing in the soil. The mutual action of these duplicated elements in the seed caused it, she said, to grow.

In conclusion, (having spoken for an hour,) she remarked, using the pronoun royal as is her custom: Owing to the lack of strength in our medium's physical form, we shall be obliged to discontinue the lecture on the present occasion. When we meet you again, we hope our nervous and physical system will have gained more strength and vigor. Our ideas have been brief, yet we trust we presented the principles which were embodied in the questions; and if we have given any thoughts or any ideas which are not strictly in accordance with the rules of logic or the rules of science, pardon us, not because perhaps we did not know, but because we had not the proper organs at present to speak them through. After a brief inspiration she resumed her seat.

Captain RYNDERS being called upon for his opinion of her powers, expressed the utmost satisfaction with everything he had heard. He declared he had come in expecting to see a test medium and to be humbugged, but had never been more deceived.—"Or elevated, enlightened and purified," shouted a bursting advocate of the doctrine.) Her prayer, he solemnly asseverated, was beautiful, her theory profound, and her language eloquent.

He had no hesitation in saying that he had never heard so beautiful and touching an exhortation to any subject. (he laid immense stress on the first syllable,) and he had the highest possible opinion of the lady's talent, though she had said several things that he could not agree to.

After an introduction to the fair Pythoness, the Captain withdrew, and the audience did likewise.

Trinity Church before the Committee.

From the Albany Statesman.

The Assembly Committee on Charitable and Religious Societies was engaged yesterday afternoon and this morning in hearing parties interested in the Trinity Church bill, which passed the Senate on last Monday night. As a matter of course, the brief time allowed for discussion at this late period of the session, prevented anything like a full presentation of the merits of the case; and the action of the Committee, whatever it may be, can only be based upon a very superficial examination of the question. It will, therefore, become doubly the duty of the House to see that no outside influence induces hasty action on the bill, should the Committee think proper to report it.

Among those who have spoken before the Committee is Hon. SAMUEL B. RUGGLES, who appeared on behalf of CHARLES G. MOORE, BENJAMIN G. WESTERVELT, G. G. VAN WAGENEN, and several others of the Episcopal Church. The argument of Mr. RUGGLES, though necessarily brief, was remarkably able and set forth in a very striking light the impolicy and gross injustice of any invasion of the vested rights of a venerable and venerated religious corporation.

Mr. RUGGLES took the broad ground that legislative interference with the Charter of Trinity Church was at once unconstitutional and unjust; that every church should be controlled by its own congregation, and that to throw open its management to the members of other parishes and other churches, was at variance with church government and with republican principles. He held that, independent of legal objections, the Legislature of the State of New-York, for good and sufficient public reasons, should not do the act required at their hands. The Church, in the first place, is better off, the congregation better off, while the property of Trinity Church is under the present management, in the hands of those who now control its funds. It needs something of elasticity in such a corporation, so that, without being bound down by stringent resolutions and restrictions, they should be able, if necessary, to throw out five thousand dollars here, and ten thousand dollars there, as the necessities of churches or the interests of religion may demand. Such a corporation, to be useful, should be of a parental character, and enjoy the privilege to use its means at its own will, for the good of all the children intrusted to its care.

Mr. RUGGLES declared that the real difficulty had scarcely been brought to the attention of the Legislature. The fact is, that the quarrel is a theological quarrel. Trinity Church, in her ministration among the poor, and in bringing her clergy and her people in immediate communion, thus imitating some of the best features of the Catholic Church, has gained the name of "High Church;" and the desire and determination of the "Low Church" is to crush her out and destroy her. He referred the Committee to the history of the Dartmouth College case, when New-Hampshire lost her senses and stretched out her arm to take away the vested rights of that institution, acquired by the gift of the Earl of DARTMOUTH. New-Hampshire then found out that she was not a sovereign State. That over her and above her was the Constitution, the great shield of our Government, a machine invented in America, by which we govern our Governors,—the broad and majestic mantle covering every inch of private property from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and protecting it from violation.

Upon the famous Dartmouth College case, Chief Justice MARSHALL pronounced the opinion of the court; and he (Mr. RUGGLES,) believed that we had better plot ten sovereign States from the Union, than lose that decision. He trusted that the Legislature of the State of New-York would not follow the Jacobinism of New-Hampshire, and render it necessary for Trinity Church to invoke the mighty power which had in former days spread the shield of the Constitution over Dartmouth College, to protect her from the usurper and the spoiler.

The Repeal of the Kansas Test Oaths and the Slave Code.

There were certain acts of the first Legislature of the Territory of Kansas which seemed to be universally condemned, and which received the special reprobation of such prominent Senators as Messrs. CASS, WELLER, and others, and which the bill of Mr. TOOMBS proposed to annul by authority of Congress. The subjoined enactments, which we find certified by the Chief Clerk of the Council, will show how far the work of repeal has gone:

Be it enacted by the Governor and the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas:

SEC. 1. That so much of the eleventh section of an act entitled "An act to regulate elections" as provides that any person challenged as a voter may be required to take an oath or affirmation that he will sustain the provisions of the several acts of Congress in that section specified, be and the same is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. All officers hereafter elected or appointed to any office of honor, trust, or profit, under the laws of this Territory shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and the provisions of an act to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and faithfully and honestly to demean himself in his practice.

SEC. 3. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

This act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

THOMAS JOHNSON, President of the Council.
WM. G. MATHIAS, Speaker of the House.

Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas, That the twelfth section of an act entitled "An act to punish offences against slave property," be and the same is hereby repealed.

THOMAS JOHNSON, President of the Council.
WM. G. MATHIAS, Speaker of the House.

The bill amending the Revised Statutes in relation to the duties of the Executive Department, came up for a third reading.

Mr. H. BAKER rose to a question of privilege. As one of the Committee of nine who had ground out this bill, he desired to say that he had not recommended its passage. It was a fraud on its title, as it appropriated $2,000 for furnishing the Executive Department and fixed the salaries of the Governor and his Private Secretary. He charged unfair action on the Committee and declared the Governor's Private Secretary had influenced the Committee in reporting the bill.

Mr. E. OWEN fully and satisfactorily vindicated the course of the Committee, and the position of the Governor's Secretary. That gentleman had been requested by him, (OWEN,) as Chairman of the Committee of nine, to furnish the number and title of the bill, and he did so. The bill was considered favorably, after the Committee had heard Ex-Gov. SEYMOUR, in its favor.

A long and somewhat personal debate ensued, during which Mr. BROKAW, of Washington, alluded to an article in the Knickerbocker denouncing Gov. KING, and declared that its writer must have been a dirty political scavenger.

After these remarks, Mr. HASTINGS, editor of the Knickerbocker, went to Mr. BROKAW'S chair, and told him that when he had closed his political term, he (HASTINGS) would settle with him for the words he had spoken.

Mr. BROKAW, in the presence of the House, then struck Mr. HASTINGS a violent blow, which glanced off and hit Mr. CAMPBELL, a member of the House.

The House was instantly the scene of intense excitement, which was increased considerably by a man in the gallery falling in a fit.

Mr. BROKAW, when order had been restored, appeared at the Bar and apologized to the House.

A Committee of Investigation was appointed; after which the bill was recommitted.

News from Mexico.

PROMULGATION OF THE NEW CONSTITUTION—MISCELLANEOUS INTELLIGENCE.

New-Orleans papers of Saturday last have been received. They contain details of Mexican News to the 20th ult.

The rejection of the Forsyth Treaties was not known at the Capital up to the 14th ult. Rumor said that they had been accepted occasioned great rejoicing.

The new Constitution was promulgated on the 11th of March, the anniversary of the adoption of the plan.

The Siglo publishes a list of 71 deputies who failed to sign the new Constitution. They represent principally the States of Jalisco, San Louis, Sonora and Sinaloa. The Territories of Colima and Sierra Gorda were not at all represented.

The law ordering elections throughout the Republic was signed by the President on the 12th.

El Monitor says that SANTA ANA is in constant communication with the Mexican emissaries.

Great excitement existed in Sinaloa and Sonora at the rumored project of an invasion of those regions by California filibusters, and serious measures of defence were preparing by Gov. YANEZ and the local authorities.

The trial of Gen. GANDARA for insurrection was about to begin before a court martial.

The pacification of the Republic appears to be for the nonce nearly complete. All the principal fomenters of insurrection, GANDARA, OSOLIOS, BLANCARTE, &c., have been put down, or arrested. The Trait d'Union thinks, nevertheless, that the policy is more apparent than real, that the clergy and conservatives are still endeavoring to consummate a reaction, and that greater need than ever exists for firmness and vigor.

The State of Jalisco was menaced at the last accounts with an invasion of two thousand Indians and five hundred mounted robbers. Troops have been dispatched in large numbers to protect Jalisco and attack the rebels.

MR. JAQUEZ, a high dignity of Iguala, was recently attacked in his house by a large number of bandits. Aided by a servant, he defended himself bravely, but was at length induced to surrender on a promise of personal safety. No sooner had he placed himself in the power of the wretches, than he was most vilely assassinated.

As usual, we read of the attacks and robberies of the mail. The Indians on the frontiers continue their depredations. The Mexican Extraordinary says:

"In Durango the Indians appear to be continuing their ravages without abatement. The different statements of their ravages in the past year are most startling. Murders, robberies and outrages of the grossest nature fill a calendar of the most pitiful character."

The straightened circumstances of the supreme Government, says the same journal, have forced the suspension of payment at the custom-houses of Vera Cruz and that city.

The Vera Cruz diligence was robbed at Acajete. A Holy Father was one of the passengers, whom the robbers did not spare. Soon after relieving him of $400 in cash, the robbers required him to give them absolution.

THE NEW MEXICAN CONSTITUTION.

From the New Orleans Picayune, April 4.

The new Mexican Constitution, ratified on the 11th of February, was promulgated in the most solemn manner on the 15th ult. at the capital of the Republic, amid general rejoicing. The day selected was the anniversary of the adoption, at Acapulco, of the reformed "Plan of Iguala," upon which the labors of the constitutional assembly were based. The usual business of the city was for the time being suspended, the national flag hoisted from all the public buildings, and the roar of artillery proclaimed that a new order of things had begun. Only one unpleasant circumstance mingled with the people's joy. The clergy alone, with the hierarchy of their head, declined to join in the celebration, refused even to permit the national flag to float from the cathedral, or the church bells to extend. The civil authorities, however, hoisted it to half mast, and duly the anniversary, unwonted.

The new Constitution is, indeed, an important document, filling nearly three pages of the large sheet of the Siglo. It runs, "In the name of God, and the authority of the Mexican people, and keeping the solemn title of 'The Political Constitution of the Mexican Republic,' formed upon the fundamental basis of the Institutes sanctioned, proclaimed the 16th of September, 1813, and incorporated the 24th September, 1821." It is composed of eight distinct titles, comprising one hundred and twenty-seven articles, subdivided again in the usual manner, into sections, paragraphs, &c.

Title 1 defines generally the rights of man, the liberty, the pursuit of happiness, the rights and obligations of Mexicans, citizens and aliens, and defends the integrity of the territory, the defence of the people, the protection of the Republic, the obligations and privileges of Mexicans, the obedience to the laws and support of the authority of the country, they in turn forming the fundamental instruction and government of the country.

Title 2 treats of the national sovereignty, which is declared to reside in the people; the exercise of the Government, which shall be Republican, representative, popular, federal, consisting of one general assembly, nominated the "Congress of the Union," elective every two years by the free suffrage of the Mexican people, and charged with the enacting of all Federal laws, in the initiation of which they have, however, only concurrent powers with the President and the Legislatures of the several States. The Congress will have two sessions annually—the first beginning the 16th of September, and terminating the 15th of December; the second, beginning the 1st of April, and terminating the last of May. They are guaranteed all the usual rights, privileges and prerogatives of legislative assemblies. Second, the Executive, vested in one single individual, styled the "President of the United States of Mexico." He must be a Mexican citizen by birth, thirty-five years of age, and resident of the country at the time of his election. His term of office is limited to four years, to begin with the 1st of December. He has the power to declare war and make treaties—subject, however, to the ratification of Congress—and is charged with the other usual duties of an Executive. No ecclesiastic can ever become President of the Republic. Third, the Judicial, vested in various District and Circuit Courts, with jurisdiction not dissimilar from our own, and one Supreme Court, which is also constituted a court of final appeal.

Title 4 treats, in a general manner, of the responsibilities of public functionaries, the members of the Legislative Assembly, law Judges, Heads of Departments, State Governors and President of the Republic, each and all of whom are separately and solemnly charged with obedience to the constitution, and the faithful execution of laws enacted under it, in their various departments.

Title 5 defines the rights and duties of the several States of the confederacy, to each of which is guaranteed a Government republican in form and spirit. Their powers are limited. They can in no case form treaties of alliance with each other, or with Foreign Powers; coin or issue money; impose tonnage or port duties, or lay taxes of any kind upon imports or exports, without the consent of Congress. No more can they organize and maintain armies and navies, or declare war, except in case of sudden invasion which admits of no delay. Each State, moreover, shall give full credit to the laws and records of the other, and of the Supreme Government.

Title 6 declares, among other things, that this constitution, and the laws of Congress enacted under it shall be the supreme law of the land; title 7 provides for additions and amendments; title 8 declares its inviolability, it remaining in full force and authority even in case of rebellion.

The new constitution does not take full effect till the 16th of September next, though in the meantime the federal elections will be held under it. The most prominent candidates for the Presidency are Comonfort, ALVAREZ, LERDO, ARAUJO and VILLARES.

THE FILLIBUSTERING MOVEMENTS IN CALIFORNIA, AGAINST SONORA.

From the Marysville Democrat, Feb. 25.

At length the Press of Mexico are actually carrying out their threats, made some time since, that the Filibusters from the North will very soon give trouble to Mexican constitutional authorities in the State of Sonora. They begin to see through the symptoms in the North; but still they are unable to lay hold of their important movements, enough for the apposite to the most common minds. They are talking in the dark, and hence their language carries with it no instruction to the public or to the Government.

The movement now being made towards Sonora is nothing more than a revival of a political organization that existed two years ago in California, which was gotten up by men of talent and influence at that time. The name of this organization was the "Pacific Star Association," and its object was secession from the American Union, and the establishment of an independent Republic, that should comprehend the territory lying on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains, from British Oregon down to General America, and including Central America. A platform was drawn up by the leaders of this Association, and the first talent of the State was at once enlisted to start the ball in motion. A large number of members were quickly enrolled; as to the ambitious, nothing could be more handsomely conceived than the baits which was drawn up for the Association. Fat offices and elevated positions loomed up before every member, and the best of good feeling characterized every meeting of the leaders.

Unfortunately for their cause, just at this stage of the game, the Know-Nothing Party, that had already carried the elections in San Francisco, succeeded in turn of nothing honey-tray in the State, and it was found to be loaded many persons as members of the Association and office-seekers. The "Pacific Star Association" had within it several of this sort, and they were decoyed from their secession designs and induced to join this new party. This was the first blow the Association received, and before it could recuperate from it WALKER'S success in Nicaragua drew off many active members, among them the author of the plan.

With WALKER and other causes the original Association has been entirely disbanded, and we can only now and then notice its members working away to the same end in a different field of action. The man who first conceived the plan of the Association we spoke of, for the erection of an independent Pacific Republic, is now coming down upon Mexico.

This is not a new enterprise to him, but one that has maddened his brain and kept his wife at work through many a year. He is no common adventurer, but a man who has led an active life, and always filled first positions in the society in which he has moved. He is married into a highly respectable Mexican family, and has the advantage of a large acquaintance with the Mexican people; and although we have always regarded the filibustering movements against Sonora as disastrous, we must confess that when we learned by the last mail that HENRY A. CRABB was at the head of the movement we came to the conclusion at once that it was time for Mexico to do something.

Mr. CRABB undoubtedly entertains the same notions that he did two years ago, and if he be not acting directly on the same platform, he has pretty much the same end in view. He is truly a daring and sagacious leader, and, although he may approach the frontiers of Mexico as a quiet American settler, still his movements should be regarded at all times with suspicion by Mexico, unless Mexico can see in such a man the ability to work good for her territory in the future Republic of the Pacific.

The Massacre of White Settlers at Spirit Lake.

From the St. Paul Democrat, March 28.

In confirmation of the intelligence published yesterday, in reference to the massacre of white settlers at Spirit Lake, we have received the following letter from a reliable gentleman at Mankato:

MANKATO, Sunday, March 22, 1857.

According to the report of Mr. MARKHAM, of Spirit Lake, in this Territory, a shocking affair took place there on the 9th of this month. Spirit Lake is about fifteen miles from Springfield, on the Des Moines River, in a southwesterly course, and near the Iowa line. Mr. MARKHAM had been to the Des Moines River to see after his oxen, which were there feeding upon rushes, and in going home got bewildered and hungry, and started for the nearest house. Upon reaching it he found the door and windows broken open, and on the inside upon the floor laid the body of an old lady.

A short distance from the house, upon the snow, he found a boy about twelve years of age, who was also dead. A short distance from the body of the boy he found that of a girl, partially devoured by the dogs. He says that he visited four other houses where families had been living, but no person was there; everything in the house was thrown over the floors. He started for the next house, expecting to stay all night, but found several Indian tents pitched before the door, and the house filled with Indians. He, being fatigued, crept into a snow bank and laid until morning, when he started for the settlement at Springfield.

There, finding that he was in earnest about his story, and swearing to its correctness, immediately dispatched two men for Fort Ridgely, who succeeded in raising fifty soldiers to come to their assistance. The men are in this place this evening, and will start for the Des Moines River in the morning. The soldiers will camp for the night at Sauk Rapid. We have heard further details, but we are inclined, from the source, to believe this to be true.

Referred to the Committee on Streets.

MEMORIAL TO THE LEGISLATURE.

On the question that the Board concur with the Board of Aldermen in reference to the memorial to the Legislature adopted by that Board on Thursday, (and printed in our report of their proceedings.) A discussion arose as to the propriety of printing it in the minutes, and also in the "document form," a member said he thought the double expense unnecessary. On vote the Board concurred with the action of the Board of Aldermen, with one dissentient, Councilman BRADY.

RAILING AROUND TOMPKINS-SQUARE.

The Board concurred with the Board of Aldermen in reference to placing an iron railing around Tompkins-square.

ALTERING GRADES OF STREETS.

The report of a Committee on Streets, from the Board of Aldermen, amending the resolution of the Board of Councilmen, relative to altering the grades of Franklin-square, Cherry, Frankfort, Pearl, Hague and Vandewater streets, was referred to the Committee on Streets.

STREET-CLEANING—(SEVENTEENTH WARD.)

A resolution was adopted to demand of the Commissioner of Streets and Lamps why the streets of the Seventeenth Ward were not cleaned according to contract.

POTTER'S FIELD.

The report of the Committee on Public Health, in favor of removing the remains in Potter's Field, was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTER.

The Board, having disposed of other miscellaneous matter, went into Committee of the Whole. Several medical accounts being presented, a discussion arose as to paying medical men for attendance at station-houses. It was said that the paid police surgeons ought to render the attendance and the bills of other physicians and surgeons unnecessary. Much contrariety of opinion was expressed on the subject. The matter was referred back to the Committee on Police.

Several reports on flagging, sewering, curbing, guttering and paving were forwarded a stage, after which the Committee rose.

THE GAS QUESTION.

The report of the Special Committee on the Manhattan Gas Company was presented for adoption and read.

Upon the following resolution (appended to that report) a discussion ensued:

Resolved, That the Counsel to the Corporation be, and he hereby is, directed to draft an act and submit the same to the Legislature, with a memorial soliciting the passage of a bill establishing a standard for the value of illuminating power of gas at 16 to 20 sperm candles, and that an Inspector of Meters be appointed to test their accuracy and to seal them upon much the same principle as Inspectors of Weights and Measures.

Upon which resolution Councilman R. REILLY offered the following amendment: "and also to prohibit any Gas Company, organized or to be organized, for the purpose of furnishing gas to the City, from being allowed to make any charge whatever for the use of meters."

The original resolution (as thus amended) was then adopted.

Councilman WARNER then submitted a resolution, which was adopted, "That the Corporation Counsel be directed to give his opinion as to the legality of the charge by the Companies for the use of their meters."

The Board then adjourned to Monday.

Coroners' Advice.

The Coroners have addressed a circular to the Dispensary doctors, imploring greater care on their part in giving certificates as to the cause of death. Good advice is a choice and scarce article—we hope the doctors will take it kindly, and act on it. But inasmuch as they have no legal authority to investigate doubtful cases, it is not strange that an occasional mis report should occur, even as Coroners paid for their services sometimes fail to elicit the whole truth, with all their "grand" facilities and appliances for "inquisition."

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

United States Court of Claims.

CLAIM FOR RETURN OF DUTIES UPON UNBLEACHED LINENS AS "COLORED LINENS."

Cortlandt Palmer, receiver of Leggett, Wooster & Freese vs. the United States.—(On trial upon the petition and facts.) The petition alleges that L., W. & F., imported in January and February, 1856, from Liverpool into New-York, certain unbleached linens, and made due entry of the same for consumption, and entered the same on free entries, and described the same on their entries as "brown linen drills," "brown linen embossed," "¾ brown linens," (terms stated to signify unbleached linens, and also the particular kinds of linens,) and on making entry of the same, one of the firm made oath or affirmation, "That I have not, in the said entry or invoice, concealed or suppressed anything whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandise." It further alleges that the officers of the customs erroneously classed said imports with colored linens, and exacted the same rate per cent. of duty upon them that was by acts of Congress imposed upon colored linens. The duties paid amounted to $320 68. L., W. & F. protested against the exaction of duty on linens so imported and entered, claiming that they were by law admissible to entry for consumption free from duty under the acts of 1853.—(Statute at Large, p. 236.) The only evidence offered to show that the linens were unbleached, and not colored, was that of Mr. F., one of the firm of L., W. & F., to whose "competency" the solicitor for the Government waived objections.

By the Court—SCARBURGH, J.—The solicitor has, in writing, waived "objections to Frame's competency," and we have only to consider the weight and effect of his testimony. Opposed to this is the official action of the Collector, entered of record, which, to say the the least of it, is, we think, entitled to equal weight with the testimony of this witness. How far in a case like this parol evidence can be received to contradict the official returns of the Collector, we do not deem it necessary now to consider. We are of the opinion that the allegations of the petitioner in this case as regards the character of the linens is not sufficiently sustained, and that the petitioner is therefore not entitled to relief.

CLAIMS FOR RETURN OF DUTIES, ILLEGALLY EXACTED, UPON BRANDIES IMPORTED IN 1847 AND 1848.*

John Michael vs. The United States.—(On trial upon the petition and facts)—In the years 1847 and 1848 the petioner imported into New-York large quantities of brandy. The quantities stated in the invoices exceeded the quantities ascertained by the returns of the gugers, but he was required to pay, and did pay, duties on the former. The excess of those duties over the duties properly payable on the quantities actually imported was the sum of $361. This amount appears from an official statement accompanying the following certificate:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW-YORK, July 21, 1856.

I certify that the excess of duties paid by Mr. John Michel, agreeable to the foregoing statement, amounts to $361; that the said duties have been accounted for to the Treasury, and no part thereof heretofore paid back; and that the party claiming does not appear on the records of the Custom-House as indebted to the United States.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

Countersigned:

JOHN ROBERTS BRODHEAD, Naval Officer.

The petitioner made no protest. It did not appear in evidence whether the brandy or any part of it was warehoused.

By the Court—SCARBURGH, J.—This case is, in principle, the same as the case of Sturges, Bennet & Co. Whether the brandy, or any part of it, was or was not warehoused is wholly immaterial; for, in either event, the duties on the brandy not imported were illegally exacted, and paid involuntarily. We refer to our opinions in the case of Sturges, Bennet & Co., and in the case of David Wood, for the reasons on which this opinion is founded.

We are of the opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and shall report to Congress a bill in his favor for the sum of $361.

BLACKFORD, J. dissented.†

CLAIM FOR LUMBER TAKEN AND USED FOR MILITARY WORKS AT PLATTSBURG—WHEN, IN TIME OF WAR, PRIVATE PROPERTY MAY BE TAKEN FOR PUBLIC USE.

George Ashley, Administrator de bonis non, &c., vs. The United States.—(On trial on petition and proofs.)

* Decisions by the Court of Claims were recently rendered on similar grounds, in favor of the following mercantile houses: Atkinson, Rollins & Co., of Boston, for $4,194; Samuel A. Way, of Boston, for $171; Wolfe & Co., of New-York, for $[illegible]; Alfred Atkins, of New-York, for $[illegible]; George W. Wales, of Boston, for $2,[illegible].

† The only ground for dissent was, that there was no "protest," written or verbal. The same Judge has uniformly, in all of this class of cases, dissented on the sole purely technical ground of omission to make protest. The majority of the Court place their conclusion on grounds of right and justice, as between the importer and the Government, regarding the lack of protest as an immaterial form affecting, and intended to guide merely in the action against the Collector as agent of the Government.

The Board concurred with the Board of Aldermen in the resolution of remonstrance with the Legislature against the formation of a railroad in Seventh avenue.

TUNNELING BROADWAY.

A resolution was presented by Councilman SMITH, that it be referred to the Committee on Streets to inquire into and report upon the expediency of tunneling under Broadway from Courtlandt-street to Maiden-lane, and also under Broadway from Fulton-street on the east to Fulton-street on the west side of Broadway.

Referred to the Committee on Streets.

WIDENING OF ALLEN STREET.

A resolution was presented by Councilman R. REILLY, that the Committee on Streets be directed to inquire into the expediency of widening Allen-street on the west side, from the First-avenue to Division-street, and extend the same as so widened through to East Broadway.

Referred to the Committee on Streets.

MEMORIAL TO THE LEGISLATURE.

On the question that the Board concur with the Board of Aldermen in reference to the memorial to the Legislature adopted by that Board on Thursday, (and printed in our report of their proceedings.) [illegible] a good novel?

[illegible] novel-reading, because it is [illegible] the exhaustion of a novel, and the difficulty of [illegible] in just now quite so much impatience [illegible] novel-reading. For novels are [illegible] read, and more profitably [illegible] of the present generation than any other class of books. The condition of modern society makes this inevitable. We have very thoroughly killed off the amusements of our ancestors, but we have not extinguished human nature; we simply crowd our life into the brain [illegible] our forefathers crowded theirs into the muscles, and whereas they rejoiced in games and sports in which our muscles and sinews, on the contrary, must [illegible] have learned violence and unnaturalness. With these the novel supplies us [illegible] the place of the tennis-court and the [illegible] of the pugnacities and the pleasures of other days.

This is the provocation to novel-reading, the ability of the demand. But it is not the full justification of that demand, nor the sufficient vindication of novel-writing. For the novel which supplies an urgent need of relaxation and relief does more than this. It can stimulate as well as soothe, and if the mature go to the novel for brief and [illegible] relief, the young go to the novel for glimpses of the yet untraversed world and its yet undiscovered machines. Where business and the cares of life, church (as where do they not?) the old, there the young will ask the novel for the hints, the [illegible], the ideals of life. And the novelist, therefore, can never be permitted to forget that he is a teacher as well as a charmer; that where he means to amuse he will be also moulding, whether he means to mould or not. Critics may cant by the hour or the week about the "obtrusion of a moral," but they will never succeed in impressing any [illegible] doctrine of novel-writing on any man of genius; because no man of genius can help impressing his responsibilities by his own instincts rather than by somebody's else theory.

A good modern novel then may be briefly defined to be a fictitious picture of human life, so drawn as to be at once interesting and instructive. According to this definition (which we have no intention, be it understood, of laying down and defending in any formal and formal way,) a novel may fulfil a function, by dealing with human life alone, and by presenting the probabilities of human life. The writer of a romance may people his book with all manner of impossible creatures, elves, pixies, fairies, giants, or devils—he is free to represent his human beings as to make them seem like Dedlyers in the Morte d'Arthur, "larger than human on the frozen hills," refracted, distorted, or even distributed from the plain statures and the standards of morality. Of pure romances there were lots but that are good, and such must be seized for confidently in the first book they are supported of the first author that one meets. Tricksh Undine is a romance of the first kind, and perhaps the best romance ever written, for while the atmosphere of the book is so unearthly as to elevate the pitch of our perceptions like a spiritual key, the attributes of the characters speak most directly to our warmest human sympathies; Mrs. SHELLEY's Frankenstein, Hawthorne's Marble Faun, Le Diable Amoureux and Peau de Chagrin; and BULWER's Zanoni, are all romances of the second kind, in which we recognize such dilation and diminishing of human nature, that we cannot evade the fascination of the phantasmagoria which we yet never mistake for a picture.

The writer of a novel, on the other hand, must tell us the story of certain human souls, and he must make us feel that story to be a probability of human life, either past or present. Of course, character, circumstances are quite at his mercy, and he has to fall down to him, not by your experience or mine, but by the conditions of your nature and mine.

The circumstances in which Robinson Crusoe, for instance, passes his life, are neither familiar nor even very probable; but the story of Robinson Crusoe is a wonderfully fine novel, because it is a clear and living picture of a man's experience in a very unusual career, while Mr. HARRISON AINSWORTH's novel of Jack Sheppard is a very bad novel indeed, because it is an absurd caricature of every-day facts, and a gross misrepresentation of an experience by no means as uncommon as one could wish it were. So, too, Jane Eyre is a good novel, because though the circumstances in which Jane Eyre is placed, and some of the characters by whom she is surrounded partake of the atmosphere of romance, and the book is in so far inartistic and incomplete, yet the story of the heroine develops an intensely faithful picture of human life in one of its most pathetic varieties; whereas the "Minerva Press" novels, that were so dear to our mothers, and the "religious" novels, that are so cheap to ourselves, are ridiculously bad novels, because while they represent the utmost commonplace of circumstance with distracting fidelity they swarm with so-called human beings as unhuman and as unreal as the creatures that children cut out of white paper with scissors.

The best novels of Captain MARRYAT again are admirable novels, because though they treat only to the salient points and striking episodes of maritime life, and so convey, on the whole, an exaggerated visionary view of the realities of existence on board ship, they at the same time are filled with the results of that life in the form of [illegible] and actual novel characters, and so afford a vivid glimpse of particular human experience. And such a novel as BALZAC's Eugénie Grandet, or CHARLES DE BERNARD's Gerfaut, is a novel of the highest rank, because while the particular process of events, by which the desertion of "Eugénie Grandet," and the subsequent penalties inflicted on her lover, or the development of the relation of Gerfaut to De Bergenheim and Clémence, is brought about, can hardly be adjudged probable, yet in the one case, as in the other, the characters treated are developed from within in a manner so exactly corresponding to the psychological necessities of their assumed conditions, as to make the reader the most vivid possible pictures of human life, when subjected under such conditions.

Now, if we adhere to the sistern of this definition of a novel, and go about looking for a good novelist, in what Englishman of our generation shall we find the qualities essential to that character more solidly and brilliantly combined than in CHARLES KINGSLEY?

Not in Mr. THACKERAY, for that masterly artist has a less universal, a less hopeful sympathy with human nature, and consequently a less absolute insight into human character than the author of Yeast and Hypatia.

Not in Sir EDWARD BULWER, for though nothing can be more absurd than to question the power displayed in such books as Pelham and Ernest Maltravers, BULWER has shown himself to possess in the highest degree only two of the essential characteristics of the novelist—vividness in the conception of character, and skill in the construction of his plots, while he lacks genial humanity to enrich his vivid conceptions, and the profound good sense of healthy passion to rule his skillful plots into a true resemblance of human life.

Still less in Mr. DICKENS, who is hardly a novelist at all, however great is his present popularity, since his pictures of human life are not pictures of human life, but sketches of people as they strike an observer of very peculiar character, and no more truly represent a probable series of human experiences than GEORGE CRUIKSHANK's picture of "Boxing-Day," for instance, represents a probable group of Englishmen, assembled and brought together on this day of the year. In a particular part of London. [illegible] of the Dickensian [illegible] of fiction, however, [illegible] a dramatic complot, so we might [illegible] attitude, were scene and time generally favorable to us.

The author of Jack Sheppard and Never Too Late to Mend, though he has, too, the dramatic and the comic far unduly predominate over the pure novelist, has nevertheless given proof of higher ability in this opposite direction than Mr. DICKENS, but he has not manifested such resources of genius as to compel from us a modification in his favor of the proposition which we have advanced.

We repeat it, therefore, that we find in Mr. KINGSLEY a warm humanity of character, (not philanthropy, remember, by any manner of means) a vivid power of reproducing his impressions to himself in the form of conceptions, a skill in the arraying together of images and the development of relations, and a wealth of English words quite unsurpassed. Add to these gifts something, (without which, indeed, these gifts could hardly have been combined in one man,) a passionate sincerity and dignity of character, and you will see that whatever the faults of Mr. KINGSLEY's novels may be, their merits must be of the very highest order.

Concede the improbability that a young tailor however meddlesome by chartism and diseased genius, should come to live and talk as Alton Locke lives and talks, and yet what absolute truth to the intellectual life of the Nineteenth Century there revealed in the words and ways of that unhappy person! what close and terrible fidelity glows in the pictures of the miserable life of his early associates; what admirable reality you find in the character of "Sandy Mackaye," with his good sense, his veracity, his exacting exactness, his rough charity, his secret sympathies, and his shrewd dialectics!

Yeast, Hypatia, Amyas Leigh, all are at least as remarkable as Alton Locke for the truth with which the probabilities of human nature are preserved in them. In treating the most romantic plots Mr. KINGSLEY never loses his love of reality or his hold upon it; and consequently never lets go his grasp upon the attention and the interest of his reader. You may quarrel with his evident views as savagely as you please, but you must at least find out what becomes of this people!

If this is true of a book in which he professes to be telling you the story of Alexandrian Greeks, or Elizabethan Britons of Queen ELIZABETH's time, how much more true must it be of a book like Two Years Ago, in which he deals with the living interests, with the living men and women of our day! Two Years Ago is indeed the finest novel which Mr. KINGSLEY has written—the most complete in point of construction, the most splendid in point of style, and, to our thinking, at once the most solemn and the most interesting in point of purpose. The central idea of the book is simply this:—to develop the influence upon individual character and individual life, of a great crisis of national trial and patriotic duty. This idea, of course, explains the title, by which we are put at once face to face with England in the moment of her sorest and sharpest need, when by the "Shores of the Black and the Baltic deep

Flamed the blood-red blossom of war, with a heart of fire."

It explains, too, the introduction into the novel of an American, upon whom the impending conflict of principles, which the least thoughtful and the most timid of us all have been compelled of late to feel that we could not escape, is to exert a like though a deeper influence, with England's discipline of foreign war and honorable sorrow. The analogies and applications which flame forth from this central idea into the private world of each man's life we need not dwell upon, for a moment's reflection will reveal to the reader their reality and their vast importance. This is the light in which Mr. KINGSLEY has chosen to set his picture. As a picture, what shall we say of it?

We grant at the outset that Mr. KINGSLEY, like almost all other novelists, has woven together the relations of his characters more closely and vividly than they would probably have been woven together in life—but the characters themselves are drawn with a marvellous truth and finished subtlety. No living Englishman, excepting Mr. THACKERAY has ever dared to paint heroes so unheroic, but Mr. KINGSLEY's unheroic heroes are heroes after all, and neither throw down the cross nor miss the crown, while Mr. THACKERAY's subside at last, as we all too well know, and look their last look of decent skeptic despair at us over the walnuts and the wine.

In all the group to which Mr. KINGSLEY introduces us in Two Years Ago, there is not one perfect person, and not one you can refuse to feel for and to pity at last, save those whom at last you come to love and honor with all your heart. The self-helpful, unbelieving, rejoicing vigorous Tom Thurnall, who roams the world over to learn the deepest lesson of life at last in a lone Crimean prison—the vain, gifted, morbid Elsley Vavasour and Briggs, who changes his name but not his nature, and makes his poor, dear, little wife, utterly miserable, and dies at last of selfishness and opium, leaving to the world his imperfect poem, and in the reader's mind a sort of pitying, angry tenderness—the noble-hearted, over-educated Frank Headley, who flowers out through love at last into a brave, beautiful life—these are not all simply possible men, but most real men, who go through the book, each on his own business, talking, acting and thinking according to the every-day life of men who are not every-day men, and interesting you as they would interest you if you met them in the flesh. Not less real are the American Stangrave, fastidious, hesitating, clever, and, at bottom, passionately a man after all—and the charming, kindly, generous artist, Claude Mellot, while the subordinate people who come and go bring air and sunlight with them, just as the innumerable people do who pass through Pendennis, Vanity Fair, and the Newcomes.

But still more striking are the female characters of this novel. On this ground Mr. KINGSLEY stands alone. No Englishman since Sir WALTER SCOTT has drawn such women as he; but in the best of SCOTT's best women we miss a certain indescribable quality, the absence of which makes women smile over most male pictures of their sex, as the presence of it makes them open their eyes with wonder over such pages, for instance, as those of BALZAC; and this quality is always present in the women whom Mr. KINGSLEY draws. It is the added charm which seals the truth of the drawing; you recognize it in the heroine of the Saint's Tragedy, as in the stately Argemone—in the much abused Honoria and the noble Eleanor Stanton—but above all is it conspicuous in the Valencia of Two Years Ago. Not only in her—the brilliant, beautiful, wayward, capricious, and altogether lovable Valentia—but in the hapless and not very interesting, but dolefully real Lucia—in the sweet, fanatical, ignorant, half-inspired Grace, (a character so absolutely true to nature, that we dare say half the critics will never believe it drawn from life)—in the patient, high-souled, devoted, unloved Mary Armsworth—in the fascinating Sabina, and even in the passionate, essentially theatrical Marie, this womanly reality glows. The cleverest female writers of the day, Mrs. GASKELL, CHARLOTTE BRONTE herself, have not shown more power of painting their own sex than has Mr. KINGSLEY. His love scenes are quite as remarkable for delicacy as for insight, if indeed insight be not the condition of delicacy!

Such being the figures which Mr. KINGSLEY has evoked, the landscapes in which he sets them are worthy of them and of his own now conceded superiority as a descriptive writer. It is no slight indication of the dignified and noble earnestness of this author, by the way, that he should make so little display of a power which he must feel himself to possess in a degree almost unrivalled. The exhibition of scenery-painting which he must so constantly be tempted to make, to hide a great but necessary way in the hero's adventures, are utterly subordinated in Two Years Ago to the movement of the story, and simply intervene as superb accessories.

The digressions which must be expected from a man surcharged with all sorts of intellectual electricity, are carried off very happily into conversations between the characters, which do not interrupt the progress of the story, and contribute immensely to the verisimilitude of the picture.

The story, itself, is intensely interesting; too interesting, by far, for us to cheat our readers of its charm by a bald analysis. The fourfold plot is managed with singular adroitness and force, and will appear complicated only to those who miss the dominant idea of the work, or fail to rise into its spirit. The introductory chapter, however, though full of good sense and of sound feeling, and especially valuable to all true Americans, is not very gracefully connected with the body of the story, and had better be read independently of the novel, which is complete without it.

On the whole, then, if we must repeat our own question, "What constitutes a good novel?" we do not see how we can avoid recapitulating almost all that we have said in praise of Two Years Ago. It is a novel—for it is a story of human life and of most probable mortal men and women—it is good, for the spirit of the book is as noble and its influence as inspiring as its substance is interesting. Whoever reads it will find himself not taken out of the world of human emotions, and sufferings and enjoyment, but taken up into the atmosphere of men who rule their own spirits, love their fellows, hate not even the imbecile and the wicked, rejoice in all grand and beautiful things—in the shout of heroes and the swift gallop of horses, in the smile of women and the glory of God's wonderful world—in truth, and honor, and faith—in wit, and courage and love.

☞ Proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Massachusetts reduce the number of Representatives from 480 to 240, and provide for the election of 40 Senators from forty districts, all containing an equal number of legal voters. The amendments have passed the House, and are pending in the Senate. Another amendment proposes to exclude persons who cannot read and write from the privileges of voting and holding office.

MARKET REPORTS.

Markets...Carefully reported for N. Y. Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, Friday, April 10, 1857—6 P. M.

ASHES—Are moderately inquired for at our quotations: Pearls, $7 50; Pots, $7 75 ⅌ 100 lbs.

COFFEE—Is in rather limited request, but is stiffly held. Java, 15c.@15½c.; Laguayra, 11½c.@12c.; Maracaibo, 11¾c.@12¼c.; Rio, 9½c.@12c.; Jamaica, 11½c.@11¾c.; and St. Domingo, 11¼c.@11½c. ⅌ lb.

The Washington brings but partial accounts of the Dutch Government's sale of Java, commenced on the 23d ult. From these accounts, however, it appears the sale opened with a brisk competition, putting up prices 1c.@1c. ⅌ lb. This news very favorably influenced Java in the London market, where an advance of 1s. 6d. ⅌ cwt. on previous prices had been established. In our market, the news has only served to increase the confidence of factors, who are not anxious to sell any more until complete reports of the sale shall have been received. Purchasers are also disposed to await the arrival of later advices.

COTTON—Is in pretty fair demand at steady rates; Middling Uplands, 14½c.; do. Gulfs, 14¾c.@14¾c.; and other kinds at proportionate rates, ⅌ lb.

FISH—Nothing really new can be reported.

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western Flour is dull and heavy, with sales reported since our last of only about 6,200 bbls., in lots, mainly at prices within the annexed range:

Ordinary State	$5 50@$5 55

Extra Ohio	6 00@7 75
Fancy Genesee	6 00@6 25
Extra Genesee	6 75@8 25
Extra Missouri	6 25@8 50

Canadian is in demand at steady rates. Superfine to extra is worth $5 95@$7 50 ⅌ bbl.; 800 bbls. were disposed of within the range. Southern is in moderate request at former prices. The transactions, since our last, comprise about 1,000 bbls. late Mixed to fair and choice Extra, at $6@$7 50 and $7 75@$8 50 ⅌ bbl. Rye Flour is salable and steady, at $5 50@$4 56 for Fine to Superfine, ⅌ bbl. Corn Meal is in moderate supply and demand, at $3 15@$3 20 for Jersey, and $3 60@$3 65 for Brandywine, ⅌ bbl. The latter brings $17@$17 25 in puncheons.

GRAIN—Wheat is inactive,—the light supply of desirable lots, and the disagreement of parties about prices, checking business. Rye is scarce and in request at from 83c.@90c. ⅌ bushel. 1,650 bushels have been sold since our last, within the range; yesterday's sales were 4,800 bushels. Barley is worth $1 65@$1 75, for inferior to choice, in lots, ⅌ bushel, being very scarce and in demand. Barley Malt is rare and quoted up to $1 80@$2 ⅌ bushel. Oats are moderately inquired for, and are steady, at 58c.@59c. for Western; 51c.@53c. for State; 48c.@51c. for Jersey, and 44c.@47c. for Southern, ⅌ bushel. Corn is in fair demand, at full prices. HIDES—Are inactive and somewhat depressed.

HOPS—There were 47 bales disposed of at 8c.@12c. ⅌ lb.

Lard is in brisk request at former prices. The transactions since our last reach about 1,500 bbls. and tcs., mostly fair to prime, at 14¾c.@14¾c., ⅌ lb. Beef is in fair demand, at steady rates. The transactions since our last consist of 240 bbls., at $10 75@$11 50 for new Prime; $13 75@$14 for Country Mess; $16@$16 25 for repacked Western Mess, and $17@$17 25 for extra Chicago do., ⅌ bbl. WHISKY—Sales have been reported of about 250 bbls. Ohio and Prison at 26¼c.@26½c., subsequently held higher, ⅌ gallon.

BY MRS. J. T. MCINTOSH.
WITHOUT EXCEPTION
THE MOST INTERESTING AND INSTRUCTIVE BOOK OF THE SEASON.
1 vol. 12mo., pp. 504. Price $1 25.
This work is not a mere repetition under a new form of old plots, characters and incidents—but one that possesses the striking characteristic of originality in all these particulars. Its subject is as universal as the air we breathe, and the evils it vividly portrays will serve as guiding lights for some of thousands who might otherwise be led into sorrowful relations with those about them. It exhibits in the broad, secondary light of God's truth the Rights of Humanity—the innate sentiment of virtue of every soul—proves conclusively that trials, however severe, refine the spirit, and that "Ever the Right comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done."
THE INDEPENDENT, NOBLE TONE
that pervades every chapter;
THE FREE, UNTRAMMELLED EXPRESSION
of Thought that will distinguish it from the theatrical books now emanating from the American Press;
THE ENTRANCING PICTURES OF THE BEAUTIFUL, and the
VIVID CONTRAST OF RIGHT AND WRONG, will at once commend the book to the
HEARTS AND HOMES OF THE PEOPLE.
It needs but to be read to be admired, and whenever one reads it, a new friend will be sure to follow.
It is presented to the public resting solely on its own intrinsic merit, INDEPENDENT OF THE PRAISE OR CENSURE OF CRITICS—in full confidence that all who admire the spiritually true, and an effort to raise the fallen, will give to it a soul-welcome into the great field of Humanity.
Copies of the above sent by mail, (postage paid,) on receipt of the retail price.

LOVE AND SUFF

NEWS OF THE DAY.

It is understood in Washington that Hon. Wm. B. Reese will certainly accept of the China Mission, although the Administration has not yet been officially informed of the fact.

The State Senate yesterday passed the bill relative to the election of Police and Civil Justices in the City and County of New-York. In the Assembly, the bill making it a misdemeanor for any [illegible] to receive, as vendee, lots in any city or incorporated village was passed. During the evening session of the Assembly, Mr. BROKWITH, of [illegible], in the course of debate, alluded to an article in the Albany Knickerbocker in reference to [illegible] Times, and characterized its writer as a [illegible] coward. Mr. HASTINGS, the Editor of the paper, at the close of Mr. BROKWITH's remarks, approached him with threatening language, when Mr. BROKWITH struck him. The [illegible] ensued, which was finally [illegible], and Mr. BROKWITH subsequently apologized to the House. A Committee of Investigation will inquire into the transaction.

The bill in regard to the Marine Court has now become a law. It provides that all summons, &c., issued from the Court can be served by any person not a party in interest. This is the same rule as prevails in other Courts, and cuts off the numerous tribe of constables who have taken up their abode in the upper hall of the new Court House, and have brought much discredit on the Court, where it did not belong. The constables are elected by the people, and are independent of the Court. The law, also, provides that all pleadings are to be in writing, and are to be verified under oath. This, also, will put a stop to much chicanery. But lastly, the law provides that all executions issued by the Court are to be levied under by the Sheriff instead of the same tribe of constables before alluded to.

There is now a bill before the Senate, having passed the Assembly, to consolidate the various acts relative to the New-York District Courts into one act. One section increases their jurisdiction in promissory notes, &c., to $250, and provides that the salary of the Justices shall be the same as that of the Justices of the Marine Court, namely, an increase of $1,000. The bill, also, makes the Clerks of these Courts into office for life.

In to-day's DAILY TIMES we publish a variety of European intelligence, derived from our foreign files by the City of Manchester, which arrived at this port yesterday morning. From present appearances, Lord PALMERSTON will certainly be sustained in the approaching general election. His address to his constituents is a clear and concise exposition of the foreign policy of his Government, and his opinions with regard to reform and other matters have completely cut away the ground from his opponents' feet. An article from the London Times on our amended Tariff, published in full in our extracts, will attract attention. From the Province of England we receive advices from Hongkong to the 1st, and from Rio de Janeiro to the 1st of February. From Buenos Ayres we learn that there has been a modification of the law relative to differential duties by which ships [illegible] part of their cargo at Montevideo and [illegible] April, and proceed up the river with the remainder. At Rio the yellow fever still prevailed to a alarming extent; but at Pernambuco it had almost disappeared. It was expected that a new Ministry would be formed in May. At [illegible] authorities had pronounced [illegible] Statements illegitimate, and a [illegible] had been caused in consequence. The law, it is said, will be altered immediately. The President of the Richmond Enquirer denies [illegible] of the representations that are current in regard to the improvement of Virginia [illegible] made by Northern labor. He states that in Fairfax County, where old estates which had been exhausted were bought at low prices and settled by Northern emigrants, the experiment has proved an utter failure. The lands were not improved,—the products of the farms were meagre, and the purchasers were glad to sell out to new emigrants who had been induced to go thither by the glowing but entirely unfounded accounts published of them in agricultural and other newspapers. He states also, that as a general thing, the Northern people who have come into Virginia are less intelligent, less enterprising and less disposed to educate their children than the people of Virginia themselves. He thinks that if the land of Virginia is ever to be redeemed it must be by some other agencies than these.

The proceedings of the Board of Councilmen, yesterday, presented some features of peculiar interest. The project of tunnelling under Broadway [illegible] being presented by Coun- [illegible] to inquire into and report upon its practicability,—the lower part of the City being the most convenient for the proposed. The report of the Committee on the gas question was presented for [illegible] Councilman WARNER proposed an [illegible] of counsel as to the [illegible] of the charge for the use of meters; and Councilman REILLY proposed a resolution, that no gas company should in future be allowed to make any charge for the use of meters. The original resolution, appended to the report, was carried [illegible] by the passage of both amendments. The Committee on Streets met for the purpose of considering the practicability of widening Robinson- [illegible] street, but no decision was reached. An adjournment [illegible] Monday week was agreed on. The Committee on the Worth Monument have [illegible] the site. The inscription as to the Hero [illegible] monument shows that it will form a perpetual ornament to the upper part of the City. It is mentioned that Mayor WOOD, in anticipation of the action of the Legislature on the Police Bill, yesterday made a large number of police appointments, and reappointed [illegible] whose terms had expired, and [illegible] "nothing else" to guide or interest people. We understand that among those so appointed were Capt. DRAKE, of the Fifth Ward, and ACCOMMACK of the Sixth.

The condition of the patients was not improved by the heavy showers of rain which commenced falling at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon and continued till nightfall. Still, compared with this morning, the gain is considerable. Many persons were there. The proceedings are nearly all of them, and the high territories of mud that prevailed on long in Greenwich-street have been removed. Our sidewalks also remain. The contractors there have not gone to work with remarkable vigor, neglectfulness, perhaps, by the neglect of the Common Council to confirm the contracts.

The Street Commissioner has contracted out in short sections First-avenue on each side of Jones' Woods, and promises that it shall be in order for the public this Summer. In Jones' Woods the work of grading the streets also goes on rapidly. Several of the streets that cross this ancient forest are under contract to be opened in two months from this time.

The sailing of the frigate Niagara has been delayed by an accident to her machinery. At 6 o'clock yesterday morning, just as the engine was put in motion, and before her anchor had been weighed, one of the cylinder-heads was found to be cracked, rendering it necessary to defer sailing until a new one can be put in its place. This will be done in the course of a week, when—if nothing else occurs to prevent—she will leave on her trial trip.

JAMES B. SHAW, captain, and PERRY FARRER, mate, of the schooner Marble, were arrested yesterday charged with running away with this schooner and selling the cargo. They were committed for examination.

Mrs. CORA V. L. HATCH delivered a lecture on "Spiritualism," last night, in the Tabernacle, the proceeds of the tickets to be devoted to charity. Captain RYNDERS took a prominent part in the proceedings, which were somewhat interesting.

On Sunday forenoon, the extensive tannery near Tunkhannock, carried on by Mr. ASA EATON of Rondout, in connection with Messrs. TOWNE & SCHULTZ of this City, was burned down. Three thousand sides of leather, all dressed and ready for sale, were consumed. The loss is estimated at about $40,000; insured for $23,000.

The Dred Scott Case at Albany.

We publish to-day the report of the Senate Committee appointed to consider the measures proper to be adopted by the Legislature of this State "to protect the constitutional rights of her citizens against the serious and alarming doctrines of the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision of the Dred Scott case," as well as the resolutions recommended by that Committee, and a bill drawn up by them to meet the exigency of the occasion. We have little fault to find with the report, excepting that it treats as a "decision of the Supreme Court" the "expressed opinions of five Pro-Slavery Judges" upon five points foreign to the record of the case before the Court, and consequently confers upon those opinions a gravity and dignity which we do not conceive them to possess. The same objection applies to the Resolutions, of which the second is an affirmation that the Supreme Court has lost the confidence and respect of the people of this State, in consequence of the identification of a majority of the Judges with a sectional and aggressive party. But the Bill itself, which is the most practical result of the labors of the Committee, deserves the unqualified support of the citizens of New-York. It conveys a reaffirmation of the sovereign right of the State of New-York to decide upon the qualifications of her citizens, and to pronounce upon the tenure of property within her limits.

Such a Bill the Legislature of New-York have an undoubted right to pass—and such a bill it is their duty to pass at a time when the high prerogatives and inherent sovereignty of the great State which they represent have been threatened with invasion.

But we cannot understand in what way the exercise of this right and the performance of this duty can borrow additional solemnity from the fulmination of a decree of contempt against the Supreme Court of the United States.

If the objectionable five points of what has been somewhat prematurely entitled the "Dred Scott decision," are indeed, as the Committee report them to be, the mere obiter dicta of five indiscreet, intemperate and unjust judges, then they do not constitute a decision of the Supreme Court, and should not bring that tribunal under the ban of the Legislature of New-York. If on the other hand they are a decision of the Supreme Court, then the Supreme Court has made an assault upon the sovereignty of the State of New-York which is not to be repelled with contemptuous language, but to be rebuked by such stern, quiet and decisive action as becomes the most powerful State of the American Union.

No power on earth can establish Slavery in the State of New-York. No power on earth can introduce Slavery into the State of New-York, and no power on earth can successfully invade the sovereignty of this Commonwealth. The utmost that is required of us then in the actual condition of affairs, is such a deliberate and conclusive action on the part of the Legislature as shall make it perfectly plain to the whole world that we distinctly understand our Constitutional rights, and that we propose to maintain them. We do not believe that any weight can be added to such action by declamatory language—or by menaces hurled at enemies of whom we are not sure that they have attacked us—nor even that they mean to attack us. The imperial State of New-York, proclaiming her absolute rights, should do so with the temperance of power. "An act to secure freedom to all persons within this State" is not the measure of a party, but the voice of a mighty Commonwealth; and it should be uttered with every circumstance of decorum, of forbearance, and of force.

ANOTHER PARKER VEIN SPASM.—The Herald has another fainting fit about the TIMES. There seems to be no end to the intolerable sufferings which the Parker Vein "historian" is fated to endure at the hands of this establishment. He can neither see, nor hear, nor think, nor dream of anything else. The ghost of the TIMES seems to haunt him always and everywhere. If anything extraordinary happens in politics, finance, or nature, the proprietors of the TIMES are responsible for it. They broke JACOB LITTER. They tore down the old Brick Church. They have kept the Country from going to the ruin to which the Herald had doomed it. They buy and sell all that is bought and sold in Wall-street. They make and lose all the money that is made and lost. They are at the bottom of whatever happens—as a great many things do happen,—which the "historian" doesn't like.

Their latest enormity is a scheme to build a railroad down Greene-street and West Broadway. Somebody has got up such a project in the Legislature. The Herald didn't hear of it until everybody else had done talking about it—and then all of a sudden the decayed fossils of that concern started up to a consciousness of the fact. Their bewilderment was like that of a bat by daylight. They suppose it to be a scheme for a railroad to Greenburg,—and, as a matter of course, the TIMES is at the bottom of it! The TIMES has no more to do with it than it had with Prince or Parker Vein. It neither knows nor cares anything about the scheme,—except what it learns through the ordinary channels of information. We have the advantage over the Herald of knowing that Greene-street is not Broadway,—but that is due, not to any interest in a railroad through either, but to diligent and persevering study of the City Map.

Meantime the case of the Herald is alarming. These spasms of terror will prove fatal one of these days. They have already had such an effect upon the rickety, broken-down constitution of the concern that it shakes and shivers at every mention of the TIMES. Unless something strengthening is administered the fall of the Old Brick Church steeple, or any sudden crash of that sort, will finish him. If somebody will hold camphor to his nose half an hour a day,—or if old Doctor BOND will send him a bottle of his celebrated liniment, we will pay the bill. We don't relish the prospect of having upon our souls the responsibility of the death of quite so old a sinner,—especially if it is to happen, as seems likely, suddenly.

"Entangling Alliances."

The measures finally decided upon by the Administration in regard to the Chinese difficulty are not only to be commended as an exhibition of practical good sense in dealing with a specific case, but as indicating also a disposition on the part of the Government towards a more sagacious and statesmanlike policy than the platforms of the Democratic Party or the practices of Mr. BUCHANAN's predecessor had prepared us to expect. It would really seem as if we were to be in a measure delivered from the tyranny of words, and inducted into the freedom of principles.

The whole system of our foreign relations has been vitiated, belittled and reduced to comparative inefficiency for many years past by a bigoted and insane adherence on our part to the traditionary doctrines of a former generation, as embodied in phrases which no longer preserve, or can preserve, their original significance, and have become as false and fatal in their application to the actual situation and present wants of the United States as they were true and beneficial on the lips and in the thoughts of our fathers.

While the Republic was in its infancy, oppressed by a weight of financial embarrassments, and as yet uncertain of the future, the statesmen of America shrank with a salutary fear from the prospect of involving the destinies of the young nation in the formidable strifes of the French Revolution, and they did their best to impress upon the popular mind such a horror of "entangling alliances" as should preserve us from committing ourselves to the policy of either of the contending parties to those tremendous conflicts. This it was not difficult to do. For the colonial character was not to be put off as easily as the colonial condition, and the inhabitants of English America had been so long accustomed to see the question of peace or war for themselves decided by causes beyond their own control, and to find themselves engaged in sanguinary hostilities because the European Power to to which they owed allegiance had been drawn into a quarrel with its neighbors, that they easily acquiesced in a policy of isolation.

But the lapse of sixty years has worked a wonderful change in our internal estate and in our external relations. We have passed from a position of uncertain aspiration to one of imperial dignity. From a batch of impoverished and insulated ex-colonies we have grown into a confederation of magnificent and powerful States, holding in our own hands the sufficient assurance of our fortunes and of our liberties. With the expansion of our resources and our importance, our conceptions of a national policy should have expanded also; and we should have risen above the petty jealousies, as we have surmounted the positive dangers, of a subordinate station. No alliance could now "entangle" us to our serious detriment, and the danger most apparent in our foreign relations, in this fifty-seventh year of the Nineteenth Century, is that we may make ourselves hopelessly ridiculous by the display of traits which would be pardonable in the people of of Montenegro or of Mexico, but do not much beseem the first commercial nation of the world.

The time has gone by when Europe and civilization were synonymous terms. The United States cannot, if they would, hold themselves aloof from the great political and commercial system of Christendom, and it certainly cannot redound either to our credit or our profit that we should show ourselves incapable of appreciating our joint obligations with other powers to the commerce of mankind. If the condition of things in China warrants the interference of England and of France to bring the Chinese Government to reason in its dealings with foreigners, the United States cannot hold back from a just and pacific exercise of their influence for the same object, because it is contrary to our hereditary policy for us to entangle ourselves in alliances with European States. We have a right, on the contrary, and it is even our duty, to insist that our voice shall be heard and our counsels respected in the conduct of a negotiation of which the consequences will be hardly less important to ourselves than to England, and much more important than they can be to France.

We repeat, therefore, that we rejoice in the present action of our Government, as an indication of the probable prevalence in the Washington Cabinet of more enlarged and statesmanlike views than have heretofore been taken of our foreign policy, and we do not doubt that the results of Mr. REED's mission will amply indicate the wisdom of the course adopted by Mr. BUCHANAN.

AN OMINOUS BEGINNING.—We put no faith in omens, but yet we regret the accident to the machinery of the Niagara, yesterday, the more, as it happened just as she was starting on her trial-trip, after being commissioned to assist in laying the cable of the Atlantic telegraph. It is a bad sign, too, for the ship; for the breaking of the cylinder head, which caused her detention, appears to have been caused by the miserable quality of the iron of which it was composed. There was no unusual pressure upon it, and it broke from no other cause than the wretched quality of the material. If one such piece of iron found its way into the machinery of this noble vessel, there may be others, and it would be hardly proper for her to be employed in such an important service as that of laying the telegraph cable until her machinery had been thoroughly tested.

Our Municipal Horizon.

Those who set out in pursuit of a questionable object by means involving the connivance—whether criminal or unconscious—of a large number of accomplices, should see well to it, before embarking on the desperate course, that their success is not only certain but irresistible; and that no misfortunes can overtake them to relax that discipline which is only the homage of inferior villainy to skill. With both hands full of booty—the scuttled and pilfered vessel settling quietly amid the silence of the waves—his own sails filled, and the pennant of no hostile frigate fluttering menace above the horizon, the captaincy of pirates is a post of almost absolute command. But let the cruise become unprofitable—the prizes few or worthless—the provisions scant, the water tainted, and danger hovering round the seas,—then every ruffian from the forecastle struts back to question his commander, and the kidnapped or reluctant of the crew take heart for a more vigorous remonstrance. Guilt finds its only toleration in success: at the first semblance of defeat every flatterer deserts, every sycophant betrays, and every trembling participant hastens to force back the responsibility on the organizer and contriver of the whole. These considerations are appropriate to a review of the present political condition of our City.

The firmness of Mr. BUCHANAN deprived our municipal freebooters of those expected arrogales—the Federal appointments. Provisions have run short since the Mayor's defeat at Washington; the action of the Sachems cuts them off from the pure fountains of Democracy; and, last and heaviest blow of all, the Recorder's charge to the Grand Jury sounds an alarm from the only quarter that has power to enforce its threats. The discipline of the civic conspiracy seems broken; and from the criminations and recriminations, already rising high, and losing prudence as anger gets the mastery, we may hope for a thorough exposition of the men and machinery under whose united action we have been ruled and robbed, coerced and scorned as never City was before, during the past few years.

Since the publication of that Charge, and our comments thereon in last Saturday's issue, we have been literally inundated with a mass of corroborative and explanatory information—statements, instances and examples—all sweeping onward in the same portentous current towards the same central point; and all coinciding with the drift of the dark, though guarded, suggestions contained in the Recorder's message. Some of these are anonymous, though giving names and dates for every infamy denounced: others are signed by responsible parties, but evidently only tell half the truth, and color what is told to secure the private immunity of the writers, who are, more or less, accomplices, with a guilty knowledge. Some have the air of overburdened consciences seeking relief in the confessional; and others yet again are just as clearly the offspring of personal disappointment and rancor,—the complaints of subordinates, dead to every sense of shame, and willing to be condemned themselves for the satisfaction of denouncing those by whom they were hired and used, and afterwards thrown aside,—either without the promised reward, or with a reward inferior to their expectations.

These crude and heterogeneous materials require rigid sifting and analysis before it would become us to put them forward in a condensed and connected shape:—it is only by comparing one with the other, and striking an average between the ostensible coloring of a certain public act, and the confessions or accusations of those who pretend to give its occult significance and the hidden influences at work behind the official curtain,—it is only by an impartial hearing of both sides, where both have been confessedly guilty, that we can arrive at results not calculated to do more injury than good. The malefactor should hear no sound to warn him of the coming danger, until justice is within her sword's reach of his head.

Nevertheless, while avoiding, for the present, any minor details that might embarrass a general argument, it is but justice to ourselves to state that we have already abundant materials to substantiate and justify the strongest language that indignant freemen could employ. By the corruption of our nominating conventions—by the aid of accomplices guarding every rill and sluice-gate of the election, and forcing the popular current through boxes possessed of a magical or transforming influence, so that "snow-flakes" entering white in open day, come out black after nightfall, when examined under candle-light by the Inspectors—by traitors in the ranks of every other party, employed to foment divisions and prevent the combination of an otherwise overwhelming and adverse majority—by the unlawful and secret concentration in one hand of all the municipal patronage, apparently divided between the different heads of departments, but really made over by its ostensible dispensers as the price of their nomination and appointment—by an ever vigilant and omnipresent system of espionage and coercion, interpenetrating the most minute details of our City organization, and as active in securing a partizan constable as in plotting for the seizure of the most splendid federal posts—by the coöperation and connivance of high officials occupying seats designed to be above the reach of any sordid or unworthy influence, and backed by a drilled and disciplined army of over one thousand strong, with captains, paymasters, lieutenants and sergeants—an army in which every private is again the captain of a squad of minor ruffians in his ward or district, whose pursuits are of a nature that allow their uniformed chief to make compensation for political allegiance by a convenient apathy that enables them to pursue their various callings undisturbed,—by these and means still blacker and more infamous, if that be possible, our political liberty has been suppressed, our municipal treasury depleted, and our City made the scoff of all mankind, as the worst governed and most expensive human chaos that ever made pretensions to enlightenment and freedom.

For turning a face of flint against the audacious sophistries which sought to justify and perpetuate this condition of our City—under the plea of past political services and party [illegible] much any Hotland, Tammany Hall [illegible] the shaking of every [illegible] [illegible] of the municipal plunder) [illegible] will [illegible] close—lately received by Mr. BUCHANAN from the party chiefly disappointed, be likely to influence a repeal for the course that has won such general and hearty favor;—and let Mr. SCHELL look closely to it, that the power now tranced in simulated death, be not revived by a friendly agency, and that machinations for another onslaught are not concealed beneath the pomp of a fictitious funeral. The cat, and other animals of the tiger tribe, not unfrequently feign sleep or death to lure nearer the prey that is beyond their spring; the comatose condition of a dangerous man does not, of necessity, imply that he will be less dangerous on awaking; and even Mr. CROMWELL or ELIZAH F. PURDY would admit—if the case were put before either as an abstract proposition—that most in a suspected wood should never halloo, till they are safely out of it.

But the prominence of the Executive must not blind us to the good service rendered by Recorder STORM, in his last charge to the Grand Jury, and the tacit promise which that document contains of still further and unflinching resistance to the tide of municipal corruption. Entering on his official duties under the avowed and immediate auspices of the Power that must be curbed, if the City is to be saved, the Recorder, since the moment of his awaking to a true perception of the scheme in which he was expected and appointed to take part, has manifested the noblest firmness and integrity—devoting himself to the real duties of his office and the best interests of our City, at heavy personal sacrifice—contesting every illegal usurpation of authority where opposition could avail; and where it could not, withdrawing altogether from any semblance of participation in acts against which all his finer principles and sensibilities revolted. Let us not inquire too rigidly whether he performed his whole duty in the days gone by. We know and are convinced that he at all times acted up to the best conceptions of the right—while the Charge under review is a tacit confession that those earlier conceptions were erroneous. A man of generous and cultured mind does not easily forego the remembrance of a personal obligation, nor will he, for light cause, disrupt all his former associations, and throw the weight of his influence and position against those who were partly instrumental in raising him to office. We must strengthen the Recorder's hands; for he has evinced a noble determination to do his duty, and under present circumstances is the last barrier between the Grand Jury and the prolific source of all our municipal and political corruptions.

The Trinity Church Question.

We receive a great number of communications concerning the Trinity Church controversy which we must decline publishing. We have already devoted as much space to this subject as the claims of other topics will allow. Besides, we regard the bill now pending in the Assembly as foreordained to pass,—and we have no desire to waste words in arguing a foregone conclusion. But our opinions in regard to the measure are unchanged. We consider the enactment of the law in question to be not only a great wrong in itself, but one of most dangerous precedent,—one which, in course of time, no one will more bitterly repent than the parties who are made to assume the responsibility of it. It is no new thing for politicians to profess the most radical theories concerning the rights of property and the sacredness of vested interests:—but the most reckless of them all have stopped, with professions hitherto, and, when clothed with the responsibility of power, have stood by the landmarks of settled principle and law. The present Legislature, and the majority which is responsible for its action, are apparently destined to the gloomy and dangerous distinction of creating a new precedent in this respect.

The controversy is purely one of law,—and its decision should have been left to the Courts of law. In regard to this point the "Compromise" bill of Senator BROOKS is more objectionable than the original proposal, since it adds new legislation where there was possibly too much already. This will be clear enough from a simple statement of the point at issue.

The Original Charter of 1697 created the parish of Trinity Church, provided for a rector of that parish, and declared that its affairs should be managed by two Wardens and twenty Vestrymen, who were to be elected "by the majority of the votes of the inhabitants of the said parish in communion with the said Church." To the Corporation thus created the various grants now belonging to Trinity Church have been made; and subsequent enactments have from time to time regulated the details of the incorporation without affecting, in any respect, its essential character. In the course of time other Episcopal Churches, not chapels of Trinity nor connected with it in any way, grew up in the City and desired, naturally enough, to share the property and the power which had been conferred upon her. Gradually they began to claim the right of sharing it,—upon the plea that it had been conferred, not for the use of the parish of Trinity Church exclusively, but for the use of all the Episcopal churches in the City of New-York. And this was the origin,—and this is still the gist,—of the whole controversy.

Every one must see at a glance that it is purely and exclusively a question of law; and as such it should have been taken to the Courts of law for settlement. But, instead of proceeding thus, the Legislature in 1814 passed an act defining in effect the original charter, and restricting the enjoyment and control of this property to the "members or pew-holders of Trinity Church or any of the chapels belonging to the same, and forming part of the same religious corporation." And now, forty-three years after the date of that enactment, persons on behalf of the other Episcopal Churches in the City apply for the repeal of this law, in order that they may again urge their claim to a share in the property of Trinity under the original charter of 1697. Against such action very strong arguments have been and might again be justly urged. But it has a show of fairness and of justice in its behalf,—inasmuch as its effect would be simply to remedy the possible error of 1814, and throw back into the Courts of law a question which should never be taken from them.

But the substitute which has passed the Senate is infinitely worse in principle and in effect. It not only repeals the law of 1814 [illegible] guard fact, but it then steps in and decides the [illegible] suits; in short, instead of a decision of the question of law, or provision for any such decision, in any court, the bill makes an arbitrary division of the property between the contending parties,—and then, itself a compromise! Trinity is to hold [illegible] and the other half is to be shared among the rival claimants. This is to stand in place of justice and of law. Is not this violation of the fundamental principle by which all property is held, but it seems the idea that there is any such principle in [illegible] John Smith or Patrick McGuire may claim Mr. Astor's property, there which [illegible] some show of reason why the Legislature should pass a bill enabling him to sue the property in the Courts of law. But if that body were to assume, as a compromise, that half the property in controversy should be unanimously [illegible] over to the claimants, its action would probably be condemned by public sentiment as outrageous, and set aside by the Courts as unconstitutional. We apprehend a similar fate for the present bill.

Our Courts of law as yet enjoy the confidence of the public. Corporations and individuals are willing to intrust them with the decision of their rights. But we presume that any one of the respectable gentlemen who are urging the present bill through the Legislature would hesitate to submit to the Honorable Andy Sheridan and his honorable associates the naked question, whether the control and enjoyment of his property should or should not be shared by the great body of the constituents of those honorable gentlemen.

Austria and Piedmont.

By the last mail from Europe, we were advised that a diplomatic rupture had taken place between Austria and Sardinia. We are not surprised that the event has been delayed so long. The two States, for years, have been animated by the most hostile feelings towards each other. Their relations have been marked by incessant bickerings and jealousies, embittered by the circumstance that the governments were and are essentially antagonistic; the one is the incarnation of a religious and military despotism, the other is based on the principles of constitutional liberty. Upon Italian soil, Austria is regarded as a Usurper and Despoiler—Sardinia as the champion of the people's liberties. What wonder, then, that they should be disposed to quarrel?

The immediate cause of the present diplomatic rupture is a dispatch from Count BENSO, wherein the freedom with which the Sardinian press discusses Austrian affairs is severely censured. Count CAVOUR replies sharply and effectively, and defends the freedom of the press with dignity and ability. Austria, thereupon, holds the Sardinian Government responsible for the attacks of Sardinian journals, and, imagining that an insult has been offered to his person, FRANCIS JOSEPH withdraws his minister.

There can be no question but that the people of Sardinia will unite as almost any question that involves hostility to Austria. We have seen that in the Legislative Chamber, the millions of francs were promptly voted to place the fortifications of Alessandria in thorough repair. This is a move calculated to rouse the whole of Italy to action. Alessandria is the symbol of a resistance that has been made for centuries to the inventions of the German Emperors. Its history is not merely Piedmontese—it is Italian. Six centuries ago the city was founded as a refuge for the victims of Ghibelline fury. It became celebrated at the time when the "Lombard League" was formed for the protection of Italy against Barbarossa. Alessandria is situated near the confluence of the rivers Tanaro and Po. It defends the plains of Piedmont, and is regarded as one of the most extensive fortifications in Europe. It was partly ruined even before the Napoleonic wars, and its restoration was always considered as a too heavy burden for the Sardinian budget. The patriotism of the people, however, will soon discover a method for replenishing the Exchequer, and Alessandria, ere long, will present a formidable front to an Austrian enemy, if one should ever appear before its walls.

The pluck of Sardinia, in the defiant attitude she has assumed, is to be particularly admired at this juncture, because she has no friends to expect any decided support from her Western Allies. Louis NAPOLEON is a Despot himself, especially in a matter where the liberty of the press is the point at issue. Lord PALMERSTON is not much better, and, of late, he has proved himself but a treacherous supporter of Italian liberty. The great Anglo-French demonstration against Naples has ended in smoke, and by the next steamer we may expect to hear that King BOMBA is once more on friendly terms with France and England. It is strange, but nevertheless true, that Russia is the only European power which takes the part of Sardinia in the present emergency. It is not to be supposed, however, that the Emperor ALEXANDER is moved by any sudden wish to encourage the propagation of liberal principles. A bitter hostility to Austria for her conduct during the war is rather the motive that disposes Russia to sympathize with a liberal rather than a despotic Power.

There are, at present, no indications that the dispute between Austria and Sardinia will extend beyond a diplomatic rupture. It is should, though the latter is by far the weaker of the two, it is impossible to say how formidable she might become if placed at the head of the Italian States, and with the Italian people united under the watchword of "Italy for the Italians."

A Case of Distress.

The Editor and Proprietor of the Herald is waging a savage and ferocious war upon the new Secretary of the Navy, because he refuses to attach the two vessels, which are going out to lay down the Transatlantic Telegraph, to the Herald Establishment! The disruption and decay which have overtaken the concern have seriously impaired its ordinary enterprise, and the only way in which it can get news now-a-days is by bullying office-holders into lending it a helping hand. Secretary GREEN, having a fellow-feeling for such a venerable piece of decayed mortality as the Herald has become, retails his private conversations with Lord NAPIER,—discloses the contents of his secret foreign dispatches,—and prepares a coupon each every night of his private conversations on affairs in general,—for the benefit of the Herald—that is, if any reliance is to be placed upon the assertions and representations of the [illegible] Should must be in his dotage to suppose [illegible] should a request as he made to [illegible] TOUCEY would possibly be granted. [illegible] for one paper are to be furnished [illegible] rooms, rations, &c., &c. on board our vessels of war, those of all the other [illegible] must have similar accommodations,—and this is a simple impossibility. Our vessels of war are not adapted to any such service—they have no room for such accommodations. The statement that the British Government acted differently during the Crimean war, is a mere mistake. No reporters were accommodated on board the fleet, either in the Baltic or the Black Sea, and special orders were issued that the correspondents of the Times and other London journals should not be furnished with rations. The English Press went upon its own hook, in its admirable arrangements for supplying the world with news of the Crimean war. Our Government has always acted on the same principle—and when BAYARD TAYLOR went to Japan, the only way in which he could obtain passage by the Government vessels, was by regularly entering the service.

We shall give our readers full and prompt accounts of everything that may occur during the interesting cruise of the Niagara and Mississippi—and we shall do it without calling upon the Government for help, or abusing the Secretary of the Navy for not joining the corps of Times reporters.

IRISH EMIGRATION.—T. D. MCGEE, Esq., has written a full and able vindication of the projects for Irish Emigration to the West, which were advocated by Father TRACEY in his recent lectures at the Tabernacle, and denounced in so startling and extraordinary a manner by Archbishop HUGHES. Mr. MCGEE says that, as he did not consider it proper to enter upon any controversy with his ecclesiastical superior, he should have said nothing upon the subject except in reply to the criticisms of the Archbishop's opinions in the Irish American and Irish Democrat. He handles the editors of these journals with a good deal more severity than necessary, and sustains the Emigration scheme itself with vigorous and cogent arguments. He finds an absolute necessity for some such movement of relief in the condition of the Irish in our large cities, and in the fact that so long as they remain there neither they nor their children have any prospect of improving their condition.

A HINT.—The Washington Star intimates to the "historian" of Parker Vein, the "Editor and Proprietor" of the Herald, that "he is throwing away labor or burnishing up the buttons of that old diplomatic coat of his—for if the Herald does not fight for the next year last puff, puff puff the Administration, he will be no nearer at the end of it than when 'poor Pierce' was in the White House, to the realization of the embassy to France." This is a poor way of encouraging one's friends.

Postponed.

The Boston Journal contradicts its statement that Rev. Mr. KARLOOS intended to leave the ministry. That gentleman will not only resume his pastoral duties, but will insist upon a new trial, feeling confident that the result will be an acquittal. Mr. KARLOOS is still under bonds of $3,000 to await the decision of the Government in regard to a new trial. It is not customary, in a case occupying so much time and with a majority of the Jury in favor of acquittal, to proceed to a second trial except upon the discovery of additional evidence. The District-Attorney has also power, however, to nol. pros. the indictment, or with the consent of the Court, to have it placed on file for future use.

Mr. JAMES K. POLK has presented to the Tennessee Historical Society a set of curiosities which came into his possession for some time. Among them is a tobacco pitcher, used in the Indian Council at Hillsboro, in 1775, originally the property of OCONOSTOTA, the King of the Cherokees; an Indian pipe presented to President POLK by the head chief of the Choctaws, and a piece of oak from the old frigate Constitution.

Hon. DAVID WILMOT, Union candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, has addressed a note to Gen. Obituary.

The late Prof. TUOMEY of Alabama, who died recently, was an active member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He made a geological survey of South Carolina some years ago, and was subsequently appointed State Geologist of Alabama. At the time of his death, he occupied the chair of Geology and Agricultural Chemistry in the University of Alabama. Prof. TUOMEY had been engaged with Prof. HOLMES in the publication of a work on the Fossils of South Carolina.

The Masonic Concert.

The Grand Concert by OLE BULL, the Mendelssohn Quintette Club, &c. &c., for the benefit of the Masonic Board of Relief, will take place at Niblo's this evening. The arrangements for the Concert we are told are complete, and the programme presented gives promise of one of the richest musical treats we have had this season. We hope to see a crowded house.

Staten Island Lighted with Gas.

The works at Townsend's Landing are now completed and 12 miles of pipe laid. The dwellings in Clifton, Stapleton, Tompkinsville, New-Brighton, Factoryville, Elliotville and Port Richmond, were illuminated for the first time on Thursday evening.

Fire in William-street.

About 5½ o'clock yesterday afternoon a fire broke out in the four-story building No. 71 William-street, and, before extinguished, did about $3,000 damage to the stock and building. It originated on the second floor, (apparently in an ash or rubbish-box,) near the fireplace, and close against the wall. The flames shot quickly upwards to the third floor, but were quenched before they had made further headway. The whole building, from top to bottom, was flooded with water. The second floor is occupied by A. ACKERMAN, dealer in satinets, cloths, &c., and adjoining who does on the third floor, which, with the fourth floor, is in the occupancy of HOVINGHORST & VAN NORDEN, wholesale clothiers.

The stock of Messrs. SILCOX & HEILBRONNER, the occupants of the first floor, was damaged to an extent estimated at $4,000. They are fully insured in the Mechanics' and Traders', Resolute, and other Companies. All the other firms are also insured.

State Arsenals—Proposed sale of the Arsenal Property, at Sixty-third-street.

A bill "To authorize the sale of the State Arsenals in New-York and Albany, to provide for the purchase of the New-York Arsenal property in New-York, by the City of New-York, and for the appropriation of the proceeds of such sales," has already passed the Assembly and is pending in the Senate. It provides for the sale at auction of the State Arsenal and grounds, on the west side of Fifth-avenue between Sixty-third and Sixty-fifth-streets, and limits the price to $600,000: the Commissioners of the Land Office to conduct the sale. The Mayor and Common Council, or the Commissioners of the Central Park, may purchase the same, if they so elect, at any time, not less, however, than ten days before the designated day of sale, at a price agreed on between them and the Land Commissioners; and, to make such purchase, the City is authorized to issue bonds for the amount. Out of the proceeds of this sale various sums are appropriated for the erection or repairs of arsenals and armories in different parts of the State, viz.:

For the purchase of the United States Arsenal at Rome, and the improvement of the same, so as to render it suitable for the purposes of a State Arsenal, the sum of $17,000.

For the erection and completion of an arsenal in the city of Brooklyn, and for the purchase of the land therefor, $40,000.

For the improvement of the State arsenal at Albany, so as to render the same fit for the purposes of a State arsenal, the sum of $25,000.

For the erection and completion of a new State arsenal, and the purchase of the land therefor, in the city of Buffalo, the sum of $60,000.

For the erection and completion of an arsenal in the City of New-York, and the purchase of the land therefor, the sum of $180,000.

For the erection and completion of a new State arsenal in the village of Corning, $14,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Rochester, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Utica, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Syracuse, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Troy, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Auburn, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Oswego, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the village of Ballston Spa, $4,000.

For the purchase of a stone fort at Schoharie, $3,000.

A bill substantially like this, except that the minimum sale price fixed was $250,000, was introduced in the Legislature last year, but was not acted upon. The Commissary-General, J. H. HONRY WARD, has again pressed the subject on the attention of the Legislature, during the current session, and with good prospects of success. The proposed sale of the present Arsenal property at Sixty-third-street, seems to meet with favor from those most interested in military affairs.

The Seventh Regiment.

The citizens of Pokeepsie have tendered an invitation to the Seventh Regiment National Guards, to select that place for their encampment the coming Summer. The Common Council have appointed a Committee to confer with a Committee of citizens in making the preliminary arrangements.

Incipient Repentance.

From Boston Post. (New-York Correspondence,) of Friday.

The DAILY TIMES continues to flagellate the Herald without mercy. Who will say after this that when people get old and hardened in sin chastisement does them no good? The case of BENNETT will stand forth to posterity as a memorable proof of the fallaciousness of such a theory; for he gives evidence of a disposition to mend his ways just in proportion as he is scourged and lacerated by Mr. RAYMOND. For my own part I have no pleasure in seeing poor BENNETT writhe in this manner; yet when I see that it does him so much good I think the operation should be continued until there is an entire reformation. Judging from the effects of recent castigations there is reason to hope that if he got about two whippings a week, regularly, until Christmas next—such as no one can administer more tellingly than RAYMOND—since no one understands his case so well—he would be able to begin the new year an altered man.

NEWS GOT UP TO BE READ BUT NOT TO BE BELIEVED.—The Herald's authority for its reports of private conversation must be spirits. How else can it tell what General CASS and Lord NAPIER say when closeted alone? It tells us their conversation with as much precision as if it was taken down in short hand, and then the next day informs that CASS and NAPIER are terribly chagrined and mortified at the publication of their private conversation! Every sensible reader knows, of course, that all this stuff is made up in the Herald office; but then there are thousands who never stop to think and ask themselves what the Herald [illegible] what Lord NAPIER thinks, or [illegible] private conversation [illegible] The Herald frequently publishes the discussions in Cabinet meetings, and a large portion of its superficial readers, no doubt, believe them without ever for once thinking that if they were true, the Herald could by no possible means know anything about them.

When the Herald was first issued, some time in 1835, it published what it pretended took place between two persons in a private room, and of a nature that the parties themselves would be the last in the world to disclose. One of BENNETT's friends, who occupied the same office with him, and who supposed that he was endeavoring to build up a respectable and reliable newspaper, called his attention to the article at once, and said:

"BENNETT, how came you to let such a thing as that get into your paper?"

"That—Why, what is the matter o' that?" asked BENNETT.

"Matter?" said the friend, "why, it is not true, it can't be true, and if it were, you could not know it; anybody can see that it is a lie; no one will believe it."

"I don't care a dem whether it is true or not," was the old Scotchman's reply, "I print a paper to be read, not to be believed."

The friend was a man of the "olden time," and he accustomed to believe what he read. He was so "shocked at BENNETT's shameless dishonesty," as he termed it, that he would never after have anything to do with him. If the readers of the Herald will, when reading its Washington news, bear in mind BENNETT's declaration that he "prints a paper to read and not to be believed," they will be enabled to account for a great deal of its mysterious and singular reports of private conversations that never took place.—Day Book.

Our Relations with China—Report of the Boston Board of Trade.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

BOSTON, Monday, April 6, 1857.

James M. Beebe, Esq., President of the Board of Trade, Boston:

DEAR SIR: Your committee report the result of their interviews with the Government regarding Chinese affairs. The Secretary of State furnished all necessary information to them, and so far as can be judged from the various conferences with the State Department and others, it is evident that our Government will not engage in active cooperation with the warlike demonstration of the European governments against China, but they seem ready to cooperate in any moral and peaceable measures to amend the treaties with China, and to terminate the existing hostilities.

The Government has determined to send out a new Commissioner or Minister, and to increase our naval force on the coast of China, and appears to be fully alive to the necessity of sending as Commissioner a man fully competent in all respects to meet the difficulties which may arise out of the delicate relations which must exist between the European powers and ourselves, as well as with the Chinese, so long as the hostile demonstrations may be continued, in order that we may exercise the influence which we ought to have in the matter without being involved in the war.

We are, with great respect,

Your obedient servants,

(Signed) WM. APPLETON,
R. B. FORBES.

REMARKABLE COLD WEATHER—ALMOST TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF FRUIT.—The rain, sleet, hail and snow, of Sunday, was followed that night by excessively cold weather for the season, the thermometer in Power Valley, and other points in the country, having, at 6 o'clock yesterday morning, fallen to only 18° above zero—a degree of cold frequently not reached during entire Winters in this latitude. Experienced fruit-growers, with whom we have conversed, express the opinion that all the peaches, pears, cherries, apricots, nectarines, and the early apples have been killed. The cold seems to have been general, and there is no doubt of an almost entire loss of the fruit crop in Kentucky, Indiana and Ohio.—Louisville Courier.

WARNING TO "FAST" YOUNG MEN.—JOHN MILLER, aged twenty-eight years, died at Indianapolis on last Friday night. The Journal gives a brief history of his sad case. He was born in Dayton, Ohio—was left an orphan with a large estate, and to his own guidance—became a "fast young man," and rapidly spent a fortune which was counted by tens of thousands. He kept a circle of dashing young fellows about him each his money was gone, who then deserted and left him. He sought Indianapolis for a home, and there, in some humble capacity, lived for a time, and died in a strange garret, friendless, and alone.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A CARD.—AT A MEETING OF THE EMPLOYES of the Hat Manufactory of J. H. PRENTICE & CO., convened at the Lecture-room of the Manufactory, Brooklyn, on Wednesday evening, April 9, W. W. TUTTS was chosen Chairman, and B. W. PALMER, Secretary. The Chairman having stated the objects of the meeting, the following resolutions were read and adopted:

Whereas, Our employers, J. H. PRENTICE & Co., have, at their own expense, generously and spontaneously provided a course of scientific lectures, with a view solely to our amusement and instruction, and have also provided a large and valuable Library, together with several large and well-lighted Reading-rooms, which they have bountifully supplied with the newspapers issued in various parts of the country; and

Whereas, The general and free diffusion of useful knowledge is eminently calculated to elevate, refine, and strengthen the individual, as well as the nation, to foster a love for republican institutions, and to dissipate the errors of superstition; and

Whereas, These lectures have been delivered by a gentleman whose scientific attainments have given him a wide-spread reputation, and have been elaborately and clearly illustrated by beautiful and interesting experiments, introduced with the aid of the lecturer's skillful assistant; therefore

Resolved, That this series of lectures has been to us a source of much gratification and instruction, and has placed those who have been permitted to attend them under many obligations to the firm of J. H. PRENTICE & Co., who have lent both their presence and their energies to render them successful.

Resolved, That we appreciate the learning, skill, and perspicuity which have been displayed by Prof. R. OGDEN DOREMUS, while performing the difficult task of delivering a course of scientific lectures before a miscellaneous audience.

Resolved, That we appreciate the valuable services of the lecturer's assistant, Dr. BUNN.

Resolved, That to Mr. HENRY MELTON, one of the firm, are we indebted for the introduction of music after the lectures, and the arrangement and successful promotion of a musical soirée, during the past Winter. Also are we under many obligations to Mr. D. D. GRISWOLD, who has lent an additional charm to the evenings' entertainments, by his beautiful and happily-executed songs.

HYATT'S LIFE BALSAM.
This potent red gum, vegetable balm is now acknowledged the only reliable curative for all diseases flowing from great debility of the blood.
Rheumatism in its most painful forms and of long-five years' duration, is quickly eradicated from the system.
Scrofula and King's evil readily yield to the powerful yet mild influence. Bad ulcers, fistulas, and all those cases, that have in vain sought a cure, yield to the most frightful sores to mar the appearance of the most delicate.
In old stages, fevers, nerve, mercurial disease, it works in an incredibly short period, removing every particle of impurity from the blood.
In cases of disease, such as syphilis, salt rheum, pimples, blotches, blisters, &c., the worst cases of impurity of the blood, it cures at fast, if taken according to the directions.
In diseases of the lungs, throat, breast, debility, incipient consumption, &c., the LIFE BALSAM can be relied on as the most safe and sure remedy ever discovered.
The certificates on its wrapper are from persons as is the case with most of the advertisements, from well-known citizens of New-York, who are such as to challenge their entire confidence.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Improvements Up Town—Jones' Woods Disclosing Into City Lots.

Sunshine is getting into Jones' Woods. When this fine old forest, which had been talked of for a great park for the City, was supplanted by the Central Park, people supposed the inmates that enjoyed the cool, unpolluted shades would with doubled diligence fight off all improvements, and probably with success, until they found the avenues and streets battering them hard, larger than cutting up tents on all their outskirts; their orchards and gardens tempting vagrants to break the Sunday and anti-stealing commandment's, and the seduction and darkness enticing outsiders to violate on their premises all the rest of the commandments, save and except only the one which charges us not to covet—such thief-haunted premises. But the Spirit of Improvement had machines in the woods, and their perpetual rappings and diggings have thoroughly frightened the proprietors, so quietly that not one in a thousand of them who ride through daily on the Second-avenue Railroad ever dreamed what they were at, they have joined their forces to open streets and avenues, and make the woods marketable. During this past year, thousands of fine old trees have been cut down, and the sunlight shone all Saturday morning upon mould that never smelt nor felt sunlight before for a hundred years. Goths that the owners have hewn by the day cut down magnificent elms, oaks that stretched singly over many rods, tulip trees and horse-chestnuts larger by half than most of us believe them capable of growing, unless that the British soldiery in the time of the Revolution spared for their beauty, year and cherished their shelters of them owners themselves planted. The operation has produced a good deal of wine in aristocratic eyes, but manifest destiny was too much for them.

Jones' Woods extends from Third-avenue to the East River, and from Sixty-sixth to Seventy-fifth street. The Second-avenue was some years since graded through its western end, but that is the only public road that has yet traversed it. Yorkville has crept down from the north to its very edge, and the city has to truly marched up to its lower border that they ask $600 rent for the available residences even within gunshot of it.

Street Commissioner TAYLOR's men have surrounded and taken the whole by storm. He has contracted out on short sections First-avenue both above and below the woods, and says it's all to be completed this Summer. The gangs in the woods have already cut down all the timber on the line of the avenue to meet the Commissioner's men.

Avenue A is also under contract by the Commissioners up and down to the woods line. Within the woods, fewer forest trees must be sacrificed to its opening, than to that of First-avenue, but it makes melancholy havoc with the shrubbery and garden of the Jones'. Right in its line stood a square of four noble English cherry trees, in whose branches was a summer arbor, all have been leveled. Avenue B is already open to steamboats, and ships of the top from the South, until it strikes Seventy-first street. Above that it will be open to the Harbor Commissioners' bulkhead, and old piers, we suppose, till past Seventy-fourth street.

Some of the cross-streets are also opening. The Third-avenue Railroad have joined the owners, to open Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth streets. Sixty-ninth-street, we believe, is not yet touched. Whenever it does start, as they say it shall next Summer, it will cut through the mansion of the Jones'—last occupied by Judge PRESCOTT, further back the home of old "Ready Money Prospect," and the ancient Captain KITCHEN. Under the bank of the river is still left a roomy cellar, in good preservation, where, tradition says, the Captain kept safe such foreign goods as had not happened to pass in the usual way into the Custom-House—and here, tradition says, he hid his gold. Certainly, here party after party has searched at dead of night to find the hidden gold—but if they have ever found it they have found wisdom too, and kept their mouths shut. Seventy-first and Seventy-fourth streets are so far opened that they will be fit for travel from Third-avenue to the river by the middle of June. Seventy-two street is for the most part on grade, but just east of Second-avenue it bores into a tremendous hill of rock. Half a dozen pairs of Patricks are all day smiling tremendous blows with sledge-hammers upon the drills that Michael, nodding, and forgetful of the peril his feet are in, holds and turns. Such elaborate grunts as the strikers accompanied each blow with we never heard before. Add the echoes that the cuts returned, and you would think the devils were pounding imprisoned spirits. When the drill is sunk some eight feet, they then substitute the "runner," a long steel bar, and work it by hand down about fourteen feet from the surface. Then one to two and a half kegs of powder lift out the original rocks to pasture.

Seventy-first-street, just before it strikes the river, undermines a tomb whose entrance passengers up and down the East River look up to with wonder. The tomb is built into the front of a high hill. A thick, broad and beautiful slab of Italian marble surmounts it, on which is the following inscription:

JOHANNES RYNDERS,
Who was the most
Loving Wife
Of DAVID PROVOOST,
It was her will
To be entered in this hill.
OBITUS 8 JUNII, 1749,
Aged 49 years.

Sacred to the memory of
DAVID PROVOOST, who died
Oct. 28, 1701, aged 70 years.

On the edge of the stone is chiseled:

"LEUVRE, Ano. 1752."

This inscription has given name to the farm which, for one hundred years, has been known as "the Louvre Farm." Within the last eighteen months, some five times the strength of the tomb has been sealed up with brick and mortar, and as often it has been broken into at night by parties looking for Capt. KYDDER's gold. Several small coffins are within; they have been rifled again and again. Two thigh bones lay, yesterday, just within the entrance, probably, those of the rich man who once walked along this beautiful height, its proprietor.

Heaven help rich folks! When the poor die, and are tucked into Potter's-field, their bones are indistinguishable from others', and they who go up on Sundays to play foot ball with the skulls that the Common Council allow to be unshielded from insult even by a board fence, cannot call them by name as they kick them. But when rich men die, and are buried in splendid tombs, their names are written over them so that the vagabonds identify their fleshless skulls, and gibe at and mock them by name. Rich people should pray for an army of children to keep their memories and their graves green.

The Auction Sale of Dr. Burdell's Furniture.

Some of the spirited bids at the auction sale of Dr. BURDELL's furniture prove to have been bogus. There still remains in the house nearly $300 worth of the furniture that was sold, uncalled for. Among that remaining, is the front parlor carpet, where the fortunate witnesses to the Grand Inquest wiped their muddy feet, and the carpet on the second floor. The blood-stained carpet of the room where the mysterious murder was committed—the purchase, doubtless, of some shortsighted curiosity-monger—was among the first articles removed after the sale. In order to dispose of the unsold for effects, a second auction will be held early next month. At this sale the terms will be cash down.

Arrest of a Young Woman for Attempting to Pass a Counterfeit Bill—She Attempts Suicide.

MARY DUNN, a servant girl, aged 18 years, was was arrested yesterday for offering a counterfeit $20 bill on the Citizens' Bank of Rhode Island, in payment for some articles purchased at the jewelry store of CHAS. SCHUMAKER, No. 36 Eighth-avenue. She was taken to the Ninth Ward Station-house and locked in a cell. Soon afterwards she attempted suicide by strangling herself with a handkerchief. Her design was discovered in time to frustrate it. She was taken before Justice DAVENSON, who detained her for an examination.

Mr. Pease Leaving the Five Points.

Rev. L. M. PEASE has been compelled, on account of protracted ill health, to resign his office of Superintendent of the Five Points House of Industry; his official connection ceased on the first of the present month. Mr. J. M. TALCOTT, late principal of of the Massachusetts State Reform School at Westboro', succeeds Mr. PEASE in the management of the institution.

It is not the intention of Mr. PEASE, however, to retire altogether from the field of his labors. His health requiring mental relaxation chiefly, he will enter on the charge of the farm of the House of Industry, at Bronxville, where preparations will be made for the reception of as many as possible of the larger boys from the City institution, to be educated and worked up into practical farmers and gardeners. The farm includes about 150 acres of land, and has on it a farm house recently built at an expense of $6,000. To carry out Mr. PEASE's plan an additional building will be needed. Mr. PEASE has been the Superintendent of the House of Industry for nearly seven years.

Accident to the Engine of the Niagara.

Yesterday being the day fixed for the departure of the Niagara, steam was got up early, and at 6 o'clock the engine was started, with a low head of steam, to take in the slack of the chains. The engine had made but two or three revolutions when the engineer discovered the steam escaping from behind the centre cylinder. Supposing it to come from some obstruction of the aperture from which the condensed water is discharged from the cylinder, the steam was shut off, and that part was examined; but on letting on steam a second time, another and worse escape of the steam occurred, filling the engine room, so that nothing could be seen. A careful inspection was then made with a light, when the head of the outboard cylinder of the centre engine was observed to be broken entirely across, apparently by the shrinkage of the iron. Had this accident happened at sea, nothing further would have been required but to disconnect this disabled engine, and go ahead with the other two; but, as the anchor had not yet been weighed, it was deemed best to repair before proceeding upon the trial trip. Another cylinder head is already being cast and fitted, and also a spare one for use in case of a repetition of this disaster. Mr. LYNDER, the engineer-in chief, assures us, however, that the ship will, no doubt, be ready for sea in the course of a week. The frigate has dropped down about half a mile below first anchorage.

Salaries of Prison Employes Raised.

By a recent act of the Legislature, the wages of the officers of the several prisons in this State have been advanced about thirty-three and a third per cent. Thus the pay of the guards has been increased from $30 a month to $40, and the keepers of the workships will hereafter receive $600 per annum. The salary of the Clerk at Sing Sing Prison is to be $1,000, and that of the Clerks at Auburn and Clinton Prisons, $900 each. The physicians of Auburn and Clinton Prisons will receive $600 per annum, and the physician at Sing Sing $700 a year. The pay of the chaplains at the three prisons will hereafter be $600 per annum. The salaries of the employes of the State's penal institutions have not before been materially changed for a number of years back.

Enlargement of the Battery—Mr. Busteed's Opinion.

The opinion of the Corporation Counsel, that the contract for the enlargement of the Battery, according to the ruling of the Supreme Court, was illegally made, the Aldermen delaying to concur in the resolution of the Board of Assistants until the year following that in which the resolution was passed, will have the effect of drawing public attention to the present condition of the Battery, and the progress of the "filling in." It is now several years since the action of the Common Council was taken, even with the defect which Mr. BUSTEED points out, and the work has advanced with the most leisurely tortoise pace, and scarcely promises, like the tortoise of the fable, eventually to reach the desired end. Yet money has been appropriated, by successive Boards of the Common Council, for the purpose of its prosecution—the term of the original contract has long since expired, and still it is not more than two-thirds completed, while operations upon it have been suspended altogether. Unless the present Boards of Aldermen and Councilmen take speedy measures towards its completion, the Battery will remain for two or three years longer in the unsightly condition which now renders it a disgrace to the City. Whatever is contemplated as to its future—whether it is to be made a fine down town park, commanding an almost unrivaled prospect, and comforting our citizens, during the Summer heats, with cool breezes from the Bay, or whether it is to be converted into piers, slips, and wharves, for the increasing demands of our commerce, let it be put in decent order soon. The old contract being illegal, the present Common Council have power to make another.

There is no reason why the enlarged portion of the Battery, marked out, but not yet filled in, should not be completed during the coming Summer, and some definite conclusion reached as to the uses to which the twenty-four acres of ground that will then be lying waste are to be converted.

The Worth Monument.

The Committee of the Board of Aldermen on the "Worth Monument," of which Alderman HARRIS is Chairman, went on Thursday to view the place of ground which has been selected as the site of the Worth Monument. The spot is bounded by Broadway and Fifth avenue, between Twenty fourth and Twenty-fifth streets.

The equestrian figure of the Major-General is intended to face the South.

The foundation will be 16 feet square and 8 feet deep, of Morr's quarry building stone, leveled up in courses 10 inches high. A cell will be formed in the foundation, which cavity will be 4 feet below the bottom bed of granite base; the cell to be 9 feet long and 3 feet square; the bottom, sides and cover to be of North River blue flag, each in one stone, 5 inches thick; the cell to be air and water tight. On the front of it will be a tablet of white marble, 3 feet 5 inches square, and 6 inches thick, on which will be engraved in sunken letters the name and date of the birth and death of Major-General WORTH. The tablet, when properly placed and secured, will seal the mouth of the cell.

There will be 2 bases of granite, the first 15 feet square and 25 inches high; and the second, 10 feet 3 inches square by 2 feet 6 inches high. The moulded base will be 8 feet square and 3 feet high, in one piece. The die will be in one piece, 7 feet 6 inches square by 6 feet high. Three sides of the die are to have sunk panels, 3 inches deep, with moulded stiles, and the fourth rough paneled for the reception of bronze sculpture. The plinth is to be 6 feet 6 inches square, by 2 feet high, in one piece. The shaft is to be 35 feet 10 inches long by 5 feet square at the base, and 3 feet square at the mitre, and in not more than eight pieces.

On the first panel will be placed, in alto relievo, an equestrian figure of the Major-General cast in bronze, which casting will be 6 feet 6 inches long by 5 feet high. For the front table on the plinth will be provided, in alto relievo, the arms of the City and State. On the opposite, the family arms of the General. For the remaining tablets on the plinth will be provided wreaths of oak and laurel in bronze. On the first block of the shaft will be a trophy of arms, the composition being from implements of war in service in Chippewa, Lundy's Lane, Florida and Mexico. The bands of the main shaft are to contain names of places and battles. The name of General WORTH will be cut in raised letters on the second base.

The amount appropriated for this purpose by the Common Council is $22,500. On the completion of the monument the remains of General WORTH will be removed from Greenwood Cemetery, and placed beneath the monument.

Committee on Streets.

The Committee on Streets of the Board of Councilmen met on Friday, to hear evidence and discuss the question of opening Robinson-street.

The Chairman, Councilman BOOLE, stated that a petition had been offered by Councilman MONROE to have Robinson-street widened. The original petition had been lost or mislaid, but he, the Chairman, had got another copy of the names that were appended. He would be glad, if any one who had signed that petition were present, that he would speak to the question. The petition had been presented to the Board. There were about fifty names appended.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, (for Messrs. E. and J. P. CHAMBERLAIN,) who said he had signed it, asked whether the names on the remonstrance were those of persons liable to assessment.

Dr. TRENOR replied that the names were those of respectable property owners.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN thought an adjournment advisable.

Mr. GOOLD HOYT opposed the adjournment. The matter had been already referred, it was desirable to proceed. It had been advertised; it was detrimental to the property owners to delay action.

The Chairman thought the original petition would be found.

Dr. TRENOR thought the anxiety of Mr. HOYT to proceed was founded on just grounds.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN pleaded for the delay of two weeks to get up another petition.

The Chairman said, that as buildings were going up, perhaps in deference to the other side the delay might be properly less than a fortnight.

A gentleman asked whether "names" or "owners" altered streets? There were not twenty owners in Robinson-street.

The Chairman replied that the Committee wished to consult the feelings of property owners.

Mr. HOYT said that two weeks was too long, merely for the purpose of getting those 40 or 50 names appended to a new petition.

Mr. J. C. HINES said several of the remonstrants were present, but only one or two in favor of the movement. They were ready to state their objections if no adjournment were determined upon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN wished for a fair chance, and argued for two weeks' delay. The Committee agreed on a week from Monday next. That might or might not be the last meeting. His object was to get the matter within the Session.

Several gentlemen were present for the purpose of advocating before the Committee the opening of Seventh-st. through the Park to Broadway, as a relief to that thoroughfare, but the subject was not reached at this meeting.

Adjourned until Monday week.

Longer Terms for the Medical Colleges.

The North American Medico-Chirurgical Review—a very promising bi-monthly, by the way, compacted out of the old Philadelphia Medical Examiner and the Louisville Review, published now at Philadelphia by LIPPINCOTT, and edited by Drs. GROSS and RICHARDSON—advocates lengthening the lecture terms of the medical colleges, or, rather, it urges that the true way to teach medicine to classes is, for some well-established institution to announce a collegiate year, with terms and vacations of appropriate length, offering, of course, no less talent than is now concentrated on an unnatural, staving, four months' course, and with equal clinical advantages. With the hospitals, infirmaries, dispensaries, refuges, asylums and material that New-York furnishes, glorious opportunities the medical student would have for laying the foundations of his medical education deep and sure. The system generally in vogue a few years ago was a great farce. Within that time great improvements have been made. Instead of simply reading a chemical lecture, and amusing the class occasionally with pyrotechnics, the Chemical Professor in the best schools now takes the class in divisions into the laboratory and requires of each member the analyses, tastings and experiments that the lecture has detailed. The clinic is made a practising school, for students, not simply an exhibition for the gratification of their curiosity. Still much remains to be done before the medical student in New-York shall enjoy some of the rich opportunities his school offers. Whether the full collegiate year would be made advantageous is very questionable, however. Some are fearfully alarmed, the schools now in existence with only four months' course, are not all paying enterprises, and depends either to professors or stockholders. We believe our New-York men, however, do work as hard by the Philadelphians; they—of the Quaker City—with far less advantages for the purpose have a long start of us, and their experience makes even their suggestions valuable.

Be Careful of Your Babies.

Stealing children for the purpose of obtaining a reward upon restoring them, is said to be quite a profitable business in this City. The infamous vagabonds who practice it entice the little ones away from home, and detain them until they see the rewards offered in the newspapers, when they re-appear, pocket the handsome reward, receive the hearty thanks of the parents, and very likely on their way back to their dens steal another. Several cases of the sort we have heard of within the last month.

THE FIRST OF APRIL AND THE MAN WHO WAS NOT FOOLED.—We have elsewhere remarked that the 1st of April produced as many hoaxes as any other within our recollection; but in spite of these facts the people of New-York were not all hoaxed. There was one man whom we knew who had a straightforward purpose on that morning, and carried out without being deceived a particle. He was a man who wanted a new hat, and remembering how thousands are every day hoaxed with the inferior fabrics of irresponsible makers, went to KNOX, No. 212 Broadway, corner of Fulton-street, and bought a hat that day. There was no "April fool" in his purchase. KNOX furnished him with a hat of his matchless Spring style, neat, tasty, light, and durable, worthy the wearing of any man in America, or any man in Europe, for that matter; and our friend who was not fooled went home on that evening fully contented with the world and himself, and complimented by all his friends upon being a better looking man than ever. KNOX has the finest Spring style in the City, and all his friends know it.

LONG ISLAND.

Fire at Bergdan's Bakery.

Yesterday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, while BERGDAN'S Mechanical Bakery in Fulton-avenue was in full operation, the whole establishment was thrown into the utmost confusion by an alarm of fire being given. Smoke was discovered proceeding from the roof of the building near one of the smoke flues, and it was immediately discovered that the wood work around it was on fire. Mr. BERGDAN had just before left the bakery to return to New-York, but by the prompt and energetic action of the workmen, directed by Judge KENDAL, the fire was kept under until the arrival of the fire engines, when it was wholly extinguished. The loss will not prove serious, and the machinery of the oven was kept in constant operation turning out bread during the whole time that they were engaged in extinguishing the fire. The fire was occasioned by the imperfectly constructed chimney flue, the wood work near having been charred by the heat.

Brooklyn Entry Thieves.

As a lady was sitting at her window in Livingston-street, opposite Gallatin-place, in Brooklyn, last evening about 9 o'clock, watching for the return of her husband, she saw three well-dressed young men stop at a house, opposite, as though they were looking for something. They looked carefully around them for a moment, and then one of them ascended the steps softly and opened the door with a latch-key while the other two remained at the foot of the steps. Instantly the man at the door made a grab at the coats hanging on the hat stand and threw three of them down to his companions, when the lady opened the window and screamed police, thieves! police! with all her might. The thieves ran with their plunder, the neighbors rushed to their doors, windows flew up and the neighborhood was in an uproar, but no policeman appeared, and the rascals escaped. It was bright moonlight, close by Fulton-avenue, and not far from the City Hall. But the police were not around, in that neighborhood, at least. The thieves took three overcoats, and dropped one; one of them belonged to a gentleman who had just arrived from Albany. If any of these rascals should attempt the same game in that neighborhood again they will not be likely to escape so easily, as all the neighbors have provided themselves with revolvers to be used on such occasions.

Judge Rose.

Judge ABRAHAM T. ROSE (Surrogate of Suffolk) has been seriously sick with a disease of the heart for some months back. Twice the County Court has been adjourned in consequence, and the business of the Surrogate's office is getting badly behind. Under the existing law no deputy can do the Judge's business.

Obstructing Justice.

A few nights ago a pickpocket was arrested in Brooklyn for picking a pocket of a porte-monnaie, containing a sum of money. The thief was caught in the act by a Deputy Sheriff, the property recovered and the thief taken to the Fourth District Station-house, where the complainant was directed to appear the next morning. It is alleged that the officer making the arrest when the complainant appeared the next morning, told him that no offence had been committed as he had got his money back again, and by management kept him out of the way, and no complainant appearing the prisoner was discharged. This is the case referred to by Judge MORRIS in his charge to the Grand Jury.

Fire in Brooklyn.

The alarm of fire at 5 o'clock last evening proceeded from the Mechanical Bakery on Fulton-avenue, and was caused by a defect in the flue. The fire was extinguished without much damage to the premises.

NEW-JERSEY.

The Gas Company Trouble.

At the last meeting of the Jersey City Common Council, a resolution offered by Alderman TILDEN was adopted directing the Corporation Counsel to call upon the Jersey City Gas Light Company and ask the fulfilment of the terms of the resolution of 1851, for the lighting of the streets by that Company, and to report the result of the application to the Common Council.

The passage of the resolution was opposed by Alderman THOMPSON, who said he knew that the Company would not comply; the consequence would be an injunction upon their works, and the result would be expensive litigation.

The resolution of 1851 granted the Company perpetual exclusive privileges, on condition that they would light the City lamps and furnish private consumers with gas, and, moreover, that the Manhattan Gas Company of New-York.

The resolution of Alderman TILDEN was adopted; three members voting in the negative, viz.: THOMPSON, CLARK and DEATHER.

Supplement to the Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1857.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

The last number of the North British Review has an elaborate article on "Style," in which the reviewer [illegible] comparison of the styles of the most popular writers of the present day, and gives the palm to our EMERSON of being the best stylist. It is very easy to be awkward a word, now [illegible] among English authors. But style is too [illegible] to be used in so general a sense. Mr. EMERSON's style, for his own purposes, is the best possible; but we are not so sure that it would be the best if put to other uses. In a novel, for instance, it would lack fullness, ease, and picturesqueness; and for narrative purposes it would be found too close and epigrammatic. Each writer's style is the best for himself, and the worst for any other writer. THACKERAY's style is admirable for the conveyance of his own humorous thoughts, his pathos, his wit, his descriptions of men and manners, and his Mephistophilian views of men and things. But let DICKENS attempt to imitate the style of THACKERAY, or let THACKERAY himself attempt to form his style after EMERSON, and the result would be a melancholy fiasco. Style is both individual and local. Each age has its own style, which is the natural and spontaneous growth of the manners of the time. In the time of SHAKESPEARE and BACON style was a very different thing from what it was in the days of ADDISON and SWIFT, and now in the time of DICKENS and MACAULAY it is more different still.

The style of Young America has a distinguishing trait of its own, which is a much better expression of the manners of the time than can be found in the Essays of Emerson, which are simply pure examples of literary art, as free from blemishes almost, as a prize dahlia. But the style of EMERSON lacks the perfume of the wild flower. It is in vain that scholarly writers that we must look for the true American style, among a class who write without the restraining consciousness that the eyes of the universe are upon them; and among them will be discovered the outgushing of a new stream of intellectual culture. IRVING formed himself after ADDISON and GOLDSMITH, and COOPER after SCOTT. The first of our authors who gave indications of an individual style was HAWTHORNE, whose grammatical purity of form and voluptuous sadness of feeling were new in literature. The Mosses from an old Manse and the Scarlet Letter were as striking instances of originality as the Pickwick Papers or Pendennis. Their like had not before been seen in print. EMERSON has been most absurdly called an imitator of CARLYLE, and even this reviewer in the North British makes the strange mistake of calling him a disciple of SARTOR RESARTUS; but he is in no sense Carlyliste, and, in his style, is far away from the North Briton. The next show we made in style, after HAWTHORNE, was in Typee, and, after that delightful vision came the Nile Notes. Neither of these books was like any other book, nor were they at all like each other. They were alike only in their sensuous originality, their freedom of feeling, their purity of form, and independence of all the conventionalities of style before known and recognized in the old world of literature. This was neither licentiousness nor affectation, but simply freedom. It was casting the old scales of puritanism, and coming out in a new, bright, and sparkling exterior, and with new vigor and suppleness of joints. They were new writers in a new country; neither English, French, nor classical, but American. Typee and the Nile Notes are not noticed by the North British reviewer, but they will exact attention by and by.

The author of Typee has again come upon us in one of his strange vagaries, and calls himself The Confidence Man. His publishers are DIX, EDWARDS & Co., who seem to have an affection for our young authors. Mr. MELVILLE's Confidence Man is almost as ambiguous an apparition as his Pierre, who was altogether an impossible and misunderstandable creature. But, in the Confidence Man there is no attempt at a novel, or a romance, for MELVILLE has not the slightest qualifications for a novelist, and therefore he appears to much better advantage here than in his attempts at story books. The scene of the Confidence Man is on the Mississippi on board a steamboat, and the whole element of the work, though full of book learning, is as essentially Western and Indianesque as one of COOPER's Leather-Stocking Tales. It is, in short, a Rabelaisian piece of patch-work without any of the Rabelaisian indecency. And here it may be well to remark that one of the distinguishing traits of the Young American literature is its perfect decency. You can read any of these books aloud to your grandmother or your daughter, which is more than can be done by the majority of British books. Some of the local description in the Confidence Man are as striking and picturesque as the best things in Typee, and the oddities of thought, felicities of expression, the wit, humor, and rollicking inspirations are as abundant and original as in any of the productions of this most remarkable writer. The volume has no end, but there is no conclusion to the book; the last chapter might have been the first, and the author intimates that there is more of the same sort to come.

Apropos of style: the Boston publishers of LONGFELLOW's poems have just issued, in two neat little blue covered and gilt-edged volumes, the prose writings of the ex-Cambridge professor. The prose of LONGFELLOW is read because his poems are popular, and not for any special excellence that belongs to it. His style is that kind of characterless writing, which nearly all well-educated and refined persons of the present day employ on both sides of the Atlantic. It is the level, elegant, and correct style of scholarly gentlemen, the style of PRESCOTT, of EVERETT, of BANCROFT, of JEFFREY, of GROTE, and a dozen others. It is no style at all, but simply the common medium for the expression of common thoughts. Take any chapter of LONGFELLOW and ask any critic to say who wrote it, and whether it were the production of an Englishman, or an American, and he could not tell. But, still it is a pleasant style, and the two little ultra-marine volumes are very pleasant books. They contain "Outre Mer," "Hyperion," "Kavanagh," and some translations from the German.

Apropos again. Here are two volumes of Essays by W. ALFORD JONES, A. M., entitled Characters and Criticisms, and published by J. Y. WHITTEMORE. Mr. JONES is an essayist after the model of ADDISON and STEELE, but necessarily with a liberal infusion of American thought and feeling. His way of looking at subjects, however, is bookish, and the titles of his essays have an odor of the library; as, for example, the first essay is on ADDISON and STEELE; then come others on PHILIP QUARLES, JEREMY TAYLOR, ELIJAH FENTON, WALTON's Lives, Prose of BARROW, POPE and his Friends, GRAY and COWPER, on Prefaces and Dedications, MISSULDEN's Essayes, and other topics of a similar scholarly character; there are, also, many essays and criticisms on later subjects and current topics, all of which are treated in a genial, sensible, and scholarly manner, indicating a well-cultivated mind, a most amiable nature, a refined taste, and a most liberal and catholic fondness for what is good in literature and art without reference to sect or country. Among the flashing corruscations of our erratic literary producers it is most pleasant to find a work so free from all the raw flippancies of the day. Mr. JONES has even preserved the antiquated custom of publishing a list of the subscribers to his books, as was done in the days of DRYDEN and of POPE. The greater part of these essays had already been published in our popular magazines and literary journals.

Reprints are in the ascendant, as they always are, for that matter. We have from TICKNOR & FIELDS a neat volume containing the Dramatic poems of BARRY CORNWALL, and "other poems now first printed." It is more than forty years since this nom de plume first appeared, and now the owner of it makes his appearance for the first time under his own proper name of B. W. PROCTER, with a small preface touchingly announcing that this is probably the "last time he shall try the patience of the public." The public has never manifested any impatience with him, or at him, but has always thankfully taken whatever he has offered it, read and remembered his poems, and sung his songs. The miscellaneous poems now first printed are very numerous, written long time ago, and on a great variety of subjects. They will, of course, be to his admirers the most welcome part of the volume, which closes with a "Farewell to Verse."

The winds are mute; the river dares not sing—
Time lifts his hand—and I obey the sign.

It is all over with BARRY CORNWALL so far as authorship is concerned; but we hope he may live many years to enjoy his fame and the five thousand pounds sterling which one of his literary admirers recently bequeathed him. The English volume, of which this is a reprint, is the very loveliest example of book-making that has appeared since the time of that luxury of the art, Rogers' Italy. We wist the Boston publishers could have afforded to reproduce it. When HORACE WALPOLE printed Gray's Odes at his non-aristocratic press, at Strawberry Hill, with illustrations by BENTLEY, he fancied that he had achieved a miracle, but what a burlesque it was compared with the English edition of BARRY CORNWALL's last volume.

Our nicest looking books comes from Boston. A new firm there, WHITTEMORE, NILES & HALL, have published in a very pleasant volume the admirable biographies of literary men in the Encyclopedia Britannica, and have given due credit for them, too, in a capital introduction, written by a gentlemanly scholar, or a scholarly gentleman, as the case may be. The biographies are of various men, commencing with ADDISON and ending with DAVID HUME, from the pens of various authors, but the chief of them are the lives of JOHNSON and GOLDSMITH by MACAULAY.

The meaning and mystery of schools, the true aims of education, what to learn and how to learn, are still as debatable points as they were in the time of Montaigne or Tristram Shandy. In a nation like ours, where educational institutions are universal, and every boy and girl is sent to school, there ought to be some fixed ideas upon the subject; but our teachers are still at school, and new systems are daily broached for improving the minds of youth. Here we have a volume entitled School Amusements, or How to make the School Interesting. By N. W. TAYLOR ROOT. Published by A. S. BARNES & Co. There are a good many sensible hints in this small treatise, but the great aim of Mr. ROOT is to teach the art of military training in schools, which, no doubt, may be made beneficial to the bodily health of boys, whether it be profitable to their minds or not.

The Story of a Pocket Bible is a rather ponderous autobiography, something on the model, though very different in style, from the History of a Guinea. It is a religious novel, in fact; a reprint and illustrated. Published by WILEY & HALSTED.

REDFIELD, who has republished all the works of Rev. Dr. RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, has just issued a slender volume containing five sermons preached by the author before the University of Cambridge, on the nature of Christ.

Stories of the Island World is a very pleasant little volume about Madagascar, written by CHAS. NORDHOFF, and published by the HARPERS. The author tells his own experiences, and gives his readers vivid sketches of Ceylon, Java and New-Zealand, as well as Madagascar.

CHARLES DESILVER, of Philadelphia, adds to the stock of good school books, The Intermediate Standard Speaker, by EFFIE SANGUINET, and new editions, with interlinear translations, of HORACE and CÆSAR.

A very serviceable little book for Western immigrants, by C. C. ANDREWS, entitled Minnesota and Dacotah, has been published by ROBERT FARNHAM, of Washington. It consists of letters descriptive of a journey made in those Territories in the Autumn of 1856.

The second volume of the important and valuable publication, Benton's Abridgement of the Debates of Congress, has been published by APPLETON. This volume includes the debates from December, 1799, to February, 1803.

We are indebted to Mr. VALENTINE, the Clerk of the Board of Aldermen, one of the few City officials whose special fitness for his place compels all parties to keep him in it, for the Corporation Manual for 1857, a work full of valuable statistical information, and a great variety of local historical matter.

Putnam's Monthly for April has made a dash into the great magazine difficulty of illustrations. Good reading alone will not satisfy the multitude; there must be a double appeal made to the imagination, and the page must be literally pictured that is intended for general circulation. What is the reason of this? Have writers grown less forcible, or are readers less lively and acute? Why must literature go hand in hand with drawings? Is not the descriptive power of the pen sufficient, but, after Mr. JAMES has described his horseman who might have been seen, must the aid of the artist be called in to make the horse and his rider actually visible to the reader? DICKENS does not find it necessary to illustrate his Household Words, neither does Blackwood. But publishers are the best judges, beyond a question; they have opportunities for measuring the public taste, and for testing the public endurance, and, if they decide that pictures are necessary, who shall quarrel with them? We shall not; all that we have a right to demand is that they shall be careful not to make the illustrations the prime object, and the literary matter of their publications secondary. We shall anticipate, ere long, an illustrated quarterly, and the North American will be startling us with some lively wood-cuts, illustrative of its heavy reviews. Putnam's illustrations are good for a beginning; the first article is an illustrated criticism of that pleasant work, MACKIE's history of TAI-PING-WANG, the great rebel leader of China. Following this is a very amusing article on Tails, illustrated with designs by our very best comic draughtsman, JOHN MCLENAN. In this number of Putnam, at least, there is no diminution of interest in the literary contents, and the illustrations are so much clear gain. There are some very readable articles, among which is one on "Our Authors and Authorship," in which the merits of MELVILLE and CURTIS are critically and justly analyzed. The serious article on Fillibustering is an admirable review of the career of WALKER in Nicaragua. It is well done as a piece of historical narrative, and every way commendable in the view taken of the moral and political aspects of this great fillibustering fiasco. Hereafter, it is reported, this popular magazine is to be copiously and beautifully illustrated by wood cuts from original designs.

WAYS TO THE SOUTH SEA.

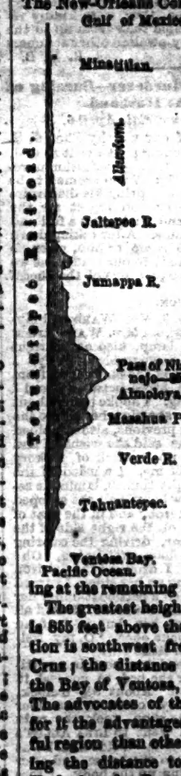
It was a sad oversight of NUNEZ BALBOA, when he found the great South Sea, not to have found some shorter way to it than about the southern capes. From his days to ours the water route has remained unabridged. The trader has still to plough his circuitous way around the protuberance of Brazil, and through the storms of Good Hope and the Horn, notwithstanding all the reiterated charges of gallant adventure at the ice-blockade of the northwest passage, and all the surveys effected in the centre with a view to ship-canals. Like a great deal of other unfinished business left over by our unenterprising forefathers, and which we of the nineteenth century have taken in hand and dispatched, this of finding or making a middle passage by water to the South Sea devolves upon us, and has grown so urgent that we may look—who knows how soon?—to its triumphant achievement. The old superstition—for geography as well as religion has its superstitions—that the water of the Pacific was so much higher than the Atlantic as to render an aqueduct impracticable, is thoroughly disproved. There is no such inequality of rank to prevent a marriage. The stubborn range of Cordilleras raise themselves between, and forbid the banns; but that difficulty science stands ready to obviate, either by climbing with locks, over the mountain summits, or by penetrating their bowels with tunnels. Railroads, too, scale their peaks, by means of aspiring gradients and decided curves; so that all the possibilities of a middle passage, whether by water or rail, are amply demonstrated. It is is only left for capital to run over some calculations as to the cost and profit of the connection, before it shall be accomplished. The road from Aspinwall to Panama has pioneered the way. Not inappropriately might we allude to BROWNING's nervous thought:

"'Tis in the advance of individual minds
That the slow crowd should ground their expectation
Eventually to follow—as the sea
Waits ages in its bed, till some one wave
Of all the multitudinous mass extends
The empire of the whole, some feet, perhaps,
Over the strip of sand which could confine
Its fellows so long time; thenceforth the rest,
E'en to the meanest, hurry in at once,
And so much is clear gained."

The several thoroughfares, completed, constructing, or merely contemplated, are in number six, namely: the Tehuantepec Railroad, the Honduras Railroad, the Nicaragua Canal, the Chiriqui Turnpike, the Panama Railroad, and the Atrato Canal. We give the names in inverse order with their several distances from the equator. In glancing at the relative merits of these enterprises, let us begin with

THE TEHUANTEPEC RAILROAD.

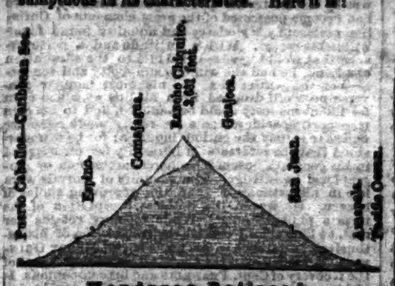
The Garay grant: who has not heard of it? How Señor JOSE DE GARAY obtained from SANTA ANA, as long ago as 1842, the right to create a communication, wet or dry, across this Isthmus, with liberal concessions of land, powers and privileges? How GARAY delayed, and the American war intervened, stripping Mexico of vast territories at the North? How the discoveries of gold in California and Australia suggested that the best possession still left her was the transit of this Isthmus, and how they repudiated the Garay grant, which had passed in the meantime, through several assignments, into the hands of a New-Orleans company, and resumed her rights in all their extent? How under the more enterprising régime of Gen. COMONFORT, the actual President, the work of constructing a railroad has been commenced with Mexican energy, which may complete it in the lapse of an age or two? The natural features of the country are more favorable to the creation of a railroad than of a canal. Señor MONO, who surveyed it many years since with an eye to the latter, found the scheme practicable, though demanding a long series of locks, the summit elevation of 684 feet above ocean level having to be overcome. Enough water to supply these successive locks was found on the table-lands; but the formidable cost of their construction has probably discouraged the enterprise, for the present, at least. The New-Orleans Company, organized under the worthless grant of Señor GARAY, had the ground carefully surveyed in 1851, with a view to a railroad, found a choice of available routes, and a possibility of still better ones being discovered. Their search for the latter was, however, cut short by the interference of the Mexican Government. The one fixed upon by Major BARNARD, the Chief Engineer, has been adopted, we believe, by the present managers of the work. The path over the Cordilleras is indicated by the following profile—a profile, unscientific reader, being such a side view of the ground traversed by an improvement, as if the earth on one side were all cleared away down to the sea level, and you were looking at the remaining wall of rock and ground.



The greatest height to be overcome by this track is 855 feet above the Pacific waters. The direction is southwest from a point not far below Vera Cruz; the distance from the Gulf of Mexico to the Bay of Ventosa, on the Pacific, is 185 miles. The advocates of the Tehuantepec transit claim for it the advantages of traversing a more healthful region than others further south; of shortening the distance to San Francisco from New-York by the Panama route, some 1,500 miles; of being remote from the possessions of European Powers, which command the other thoroughfares. It is, on the other hand, objected that the winds and currents of the Pacific terminus are unfriendly to the access of sailing craft; an objection, however, equally applicable to all the ports contiguous to the Isthmus. The local traffic of the river Costzacoalcos is certainly of great value, nearly eight thousand tons of mahogany having been exported thence last year, chiefly to the United States. Recent intelligence from Guatemala proves that the confidence of President CARRERA in the railroad enterprise is so perfect, that he has already chartered a line of steamships to connect Istapa with Tehuantepec. In the meantime, a carriage road has been so far completed across the Isthmus, as to warrant Colonel A. G. SLOO, the head of this special undertaking, in contracting with the Government of the United States for the transmission of a semi-monthly mail between New-Orleans and San Francisco. Colonel SLOO proposes to commence in the course of the Summer.

HONDURAS RAILROAD.

Mr. E. G. SQUIER, of Nicaragua notoriety, has been running about the world these three years with a Honduras Railroad in his breeches pocket. Disgusted with the Nicaragua project, he proposed Honduras for a better, discovered a gorge in the mountains admitting of a bold excelsior, and through it laid down his route. The survey, effected in 1853, yielded a profile extremely presumptuous in its characteristics. Here it is:



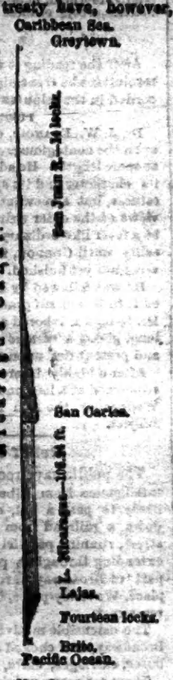
Honduras Railroad.

The height attained, 2,621 feet, is formidable, but not impracticable. The road is designed to commence at Puerto Caballos, close down in that angle of the Caribbean Sea which is formed by the Belize and the north shore of Honduras, and runs directly south to Amapala, 160 miles away upon the Bay of Fonseca, Pacific side. The most obvious remark suggested by inspection of the map is, that its approaches on the east are controlled by the British settlements at the Belize, a circumstance disadvantageous to any American interest in the road, while it forms a powerful recommendation to an English Company. We accordingly hear that London capitalists have adopted it, designing to push the work with the utmost diligence.

The recent treaty between Her Majesty's Government and Honduras, in relation to the Bay Islands, and the Belize, had the pacification of that vicinage in sight, as an inducement to the undertaking. Mr. SQUIER has been met by the opinions of careful engineers, who pronounce his scheme impracticable. Others have sustained him; and as such men as the Governor of the Bank of England head the new Company, we are to assume that the balance of authority is in his favor. The Government of Honduras is especially gracious to the enterprise, because it connects Comayagua, the capital, with both oceans.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

A ship canal through Lake Nicaragua was a pet project a century ago. Governments and private companies have time out of mind procured surveys to be made demonstrating the possibility of the work; without, however, bringing it within the limits of reasonable cost. The estimates have, in fact, in every instance, frightened the speculator away. Six or seven years since, the prospect became so luminous that the British and American Governments deemed it prudent to provide at once for the neutralization of the route, whence sprang the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, of dutious memory. Both the project and the treaty have, however, come to nothing; and who shall propose the revival of either, while the struggle between WALKER and the natives continues? The ultimate practicability of the enterprise is probably ascertained, notwithstanding the criticisms of Mr. SQUIER. The San Juan River to the lake may be supplied with locks, and other slack-water arrangements, so that 120 miles of the distance may be overcome; the lake, which is 105 feet above the Pacific, may be traversed by vessels of deep draught to Lajas, 66 miles; whence a cut embodying a series of locks fed from the lake may conduct to the Pacific, at Brito. Or, extending through Lake Managua, the route may debouch at Realejo, a more elaborate and extensive work, without attractions to capitalists. Of the line by the way of Brito accept the annexed portrait:



The realization of this outline is, we repeat, a question of time.

CHIRIQUI TURNPIKE.

The Chiriqui lagoon lies in the northern edge of the State of the same name, which is the northernmost province of New-Granada, and adjoins Costa Rica. The lagoon is midway on the map between Greytown and Aspinwall. Two American companies have directed their attention to this locality—the Chiriqui Improvement and the Chiriqui Real Estate Companies,—the former with a view to constructing a broad carriage-way for the transit of passengers from the lagoon to David, a port nearly ninety mile distant upon the Pacific. The height of the Cordilleras discourages the idea of a Railroad, while the same difficulty, and the absence of water, forbid a Canal. The great productiveness and abundance of local traffic of the country must repay generously the less costly work.

PANAMA RAILROAD.

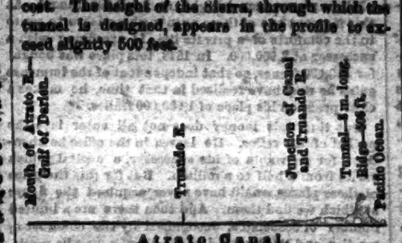
While the rest of the world has talked itself weary of Isthmus transits, New-York has made one. The Panama road owes its existence to the celebrated traveler JOHN L. STEPHENS, who first conceived the plan, and inaugurated the necessary surveys. It departs from the Island of Manzanilla, in the Caribbean Sea, whereon stands the city of Aspinwall, ascends the Sierra steadily until within a few miles of the Gulf of Panama, attaining a summit level of 255 feet; when, by a grade of 60 feet to the mile, it descends to the Pacific waters at Panama. The entire length is 47.6 miles.

Panama Railroad.

In order to accommodate the urgent demands of California travel, it was built in the first instance with no regard to stability. The work of straightening abrupt curves, reducing grades, and replacing wooden bridges and water-ways with stone masonry, now engages the Company. Eventually the road will be one of the most useful in the world. As is the case with the Honduras road, there is little prospect of a water channel in the neighborhood, owing to the absence of sources at a sufficient elevation to supply the locks.

ATRATO CANAL.

The Emperor of the French, we are told, has recently become deeply interested in a canal leading from the Atrato River to the Pacific Ocean. This is the track pointed out by VON HUMBOLDT, as the only one he believed practicable. The Atrato River is a broad and deep tributary to the Caribbean Sea, discharging into the Gulf of Darien. The examination effected at the cost of Wall-street enterprise, shows that the Atrato and the Truando, one of its estuaries, may be made navigable for the largest vessels, one hundred miles, to a point twenty-five miles from the South Sea. The latter twenty-five miles require some heavy excavations, and a double tunnel three miles long, and high enough for the "mast of a tall admiral" to pass through. The expense of such a work is prodigious; the estimates call for some $150,000,000, but as the canal is to be without locks, running therefore upon the level of river and sea, its advantages may perhaps balance the initial extravagance of cost. The height of the Sierra, through which the tunnel is designed, appears in the profile to exceed slightly 500 feet.



Atrato Canal.

The Chiriqui Turnpike, the Panama Railroad, and the Atrato Canal, are within the bounds of New-Granada; and must therefore class as South American enterprises. Between the last two is a long stretch of Isthmus, traversed by the inexhaustible Cordilleras, through which exploration has thus far sought an available passage vainly. Poor STRAIN, after squandering the lives of his companions, and barely saving his own, found no practicable depression. The half-dozen routes we have indicated are therefore the only ones known, or likely to be. We may make up our minds to be contented with the choice they offer us.

As to cost, it is hard to say how large it ought to be to prohibit the hope of a profitable return. Considering the immense value of the East India trade, European and American; considering the near prospect of enlarged intercourse with Japan and China; considering the growing empires of Australia and California; the wealth of the South Sea Islands; the opulence of the South American coast; the extent of the Pacific whale-fisheries; and finally, considering that all these are only accessible at present by tedious, expensive, perilous voyages from six to ten thousand miles longer than the paths through the Isthmus; can we doubt the value of these latter channels of intercourse? To avoid the Southern Capes of frost, and cloud, and storm, what transhipments at Tehuantepec, or Panama, by the railroad, would not be economical and wise? What canal tolls would be large enough to drive the merchantman around the Horn, rather than float through the calm waters of an aqueduct, the "journey of a Sabbath day?" There is certainly very little doubt that Central America will presently be the world's highway.

FROM ST. DOMINGO.

Political Condition of the Republic—President's Message—The Banishment of Santanna, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ST. DOMINGO CITY, Tuesday, March 3, 1857.

The Spanish brig Habanero leaves here to-morrow for Santiago de Cuba, and I avail myself of the politeness of one of her officers to forward you this letter, which will probably reach you via the Havana. The affairs of our little Republic go on in pretty much the same way as before, only that our "Matriculados" have become more orderly, and inspire the authorities with less suspicion, particularly since the departure of Señor SEGOVIA, who was the life and soul of all the disturbances that have threatened to undermine our political existence.

It is well known that President BAEZ's sympathies are with the European powers, and that he is secretly sworn to the French interest that has for years past been exerted to bring about a union of this part of the island with the negro empire of Hayti. His display of clemency towards SANTANNA was founded on the hope that the French Governor of Martinique would punish him by death or perpetual imprisonment. His message, a translation of which I subjoin, is a strong evidence of his anti-American ideas and plans.

MESSRS. SENATORS—The constitutional precept, in unison with the intimate wishes of my heart, brings me in your presence to-day with the purpose of displaying to the eyes of the nation the faithful picture of its present state. I say exact, because the first duty of my position is to represent the situation of the country in its true colors without any exaggeration.

Thanks to Divine Providence, this picture will not sadden us, for if much is wanting to complete our organization, there are grounds to hope for a brilliant picture, which is not far removed.

It is quite natural that a small and weak State, which only counts thirteen years of existence, should find itself still remote from the climax of its prosperity, the more so as foreign enemies and domestic obstacles have assisted in impeding its march, and when the weak hands into which, with far different hopes, I gave the helm of State on finishing my first term, far from stimulating that progress, made it retrograde. Public opinion authorises to make this assertion, solemnly and lawfully expressed and confirmed by the Lenado Consultor, as I shall say hereafter; and if I mention this fact of universal notoriety, it is not from a desire to recriminate, but because I feel obliged to declare to the Republic that when her voice called me to the power for the second time, I have found the Government weakened and disorganized, quite different from the flourishing state in which my successor had received it.

Fortunately for the Republic, the favor of Heaven has not entirely abandoned us, as it is evident in the preservation of our friendly relations with the foreign nations who are our allies and friends.

In the midst of this satisfaction, I am grieved to inform you that the hopes manifested in my message to Congress in 1853 in reference to our relations with the common Father of the Faithful, were shamefully blighted. I then remarked "that the Government believed it to be of urgent necessity and of the highest importance for this Catholic people to celebrate a Concordat with the Holy See. For this purpose, and in order to have a representative in Europe, in the serious circumstances of that epoch, Dr. ELIAS ROBIQUENA was appointed plenipotentiary. Favorable results are anticipated from his mission. Now these desirable results, and at that time easy to be obtained, were frustrated by the persecution which my successor raised against the Catholic Clergy, revenging himself on our most respectable and virtuous prelate, on the very worthy priest charged with the mission to Rome, on other pastors, unmindful that, according to the words of the Gospel, he ran the risk of dispersing the flock. I need not say that this situation cannot be prolonged, and that it is necessary to join again the broken chain that is to unite us with the head of Christianity, till we obtain a concordat that will regulate and cement the position of the Dominican Church. Such is the purpose of the Government, and it hopes to carry it out in a short time.

The indication that I have just made of the good state of our relations with foreign powers, does not exempt me from the grateful duty of making special mention of France and England. The bloody contest sustained by those powers in the East had been a material obstacle to the mediation terminating its work of settlement between the two States of the Spanish Island. But the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and of the Emperor of the French, who have never for a single moment belied their benevolence toward us, as soon as peace had been made with Russia, again busied themselves with our relations with Hayti. The first effect of their active exertions has been to make the Haytien chief promise a truce for three years, thus affording a sufficient period for fixing the basis of a definite treaty. This result may appear trivial, but it is not so, if we take into consideration that it is the beginning of still greater ones, and, above all, an evident proof of the sentiments which animate the mediating powers.

Our ancient mother Spain has not shown herself less favorable towards us. The frankness and generosity of which she gave proofs when she celebrated the treaty recognizing our independence, and the cession of this territory, have continued to reign throughout all her relations with this Republic. The question of the Matriculados, the cause of certain difficulties, and the refusal of a decree, dated February 27, I have obtained the decree of the 20th of September, the only way, in my opinion, of remedying the disorders in the office which existed when I took possession of the presidency. Giving it all the importance that deserves, I shall endeavor to perfect it as far as I am able.

Such are the principal things I consider worthy of your attention. My lively wishes shall always be that our actions surpass our words; that in the progress of material advancement of our country, you may always see the present administration actively employed and practically zealous. For this reason I have published the brief words of this Message to the people, as the display of programmes of government. Action are better undertaking, Senators. Let the Dominican people ever prove, as heretofore, submissive to the law, and docile to the voice of authority. May Heaven bless our efforts, and I will prove to you, Senators, my wish is to see my country prosperous and happy.

BUENAVENTURA BAEZ.

ST. DOMINGO, March 2, 1857.

The message has been variously commented on by the different parties, but with all proper privacy, for it would be extremely dangerous to be too open in expressing opposition to our Parisian President. The studied silence on ELLIOT's treaty, and the thorough any reference to the United States, should convince the present Administration at Washington that some steps must be taken, and that speedily, if they wish to defend the famous Monroe Doctrine. Our public is constantly visited by the national vessels of the allied powers, and the extreme politeness which they receive at the hands of the President and his satellites convince me that something is being concocted detrimental to the interests and policy of the American people. Want of time consumed in the translation of the Message, has deprived me of the pleasure of entering more into the details of our domestic situation. I hope, however, soon to have the pleasure of sending you an interesting letter on the actual situation of this unhappy Republic.

The Hudson's Bay Territory Question.

Mr. Justice DRAPER having been appointed a Special Deputy to England to represent Canadian rights and interests in the matter of the Hudson's Bay Territory, of which so much is said, has received voluminous instructions from the Governor-General. The Provincial Parliament having called for copies of the correspondence, the instructions are made public. They direct the Deputy to report himself immediately to the Colonial Secretary, to offer all the information of which he is in possession to any Parliamentary Committee that may desire it, and, while forbidden to conclude any negotiations, he is particularly ordered to operate against immigration from the United States. On this point the instructions are very full and explicit. We copy:

"His Excellency feels it particularly necessary to impress the importance of securing the Northwest Territory against the sudden and unauthorized influx of immigration from the United States side should be strongly pressed. He fears that the continued vacancy of this great tract, with a boundary not marked on the soil itself, may lead to future loss, and injury both to England and to Canada. He wishes you to urge the expediency of marking out the limits, and so protecting the frontier of the lands above Lake Superior, about the Red River, and thence to the Pacific, as effectually to secure them against violent seizure or irregular settlement, until the advancing tide of emigrants from Canada and the United Kingdom may fairly flow into them and occupy them as subjects of the Queen on behalf of the British Empire.

With these objects in view, it is especially important that Her Majesty's Government should guard any renewal of a license of occupation, (should such be determined on,) or any recognition of rights in the Company, by such stipulations as will cause such license or such rights not to interfere with the fair and legitimate occupation of tracts adapted for settlement.

It is unnecessary, of course, to urge in any way the future importance of Vancouver's Island, as the key to all British North America, on the side of the Pacific, situated as it is between the extensive seaboard of Russian-America and the vast territory in the hands of the United States."

FRENCH ADVERTISING—A Parisian journal gives some interesting facts in relation to the history of French advertising. It says that before the year 1832, such a thing as an advertisement was comparatively unknown in Paris, and for eight years thereafter, but little headway was made. But about 1836, a better condition of affairs was established by the "invention" of newspapers at a moderate rate. The diminution in the price led to an increase in the number of subscribers, greater publicity was obtained, and as a consequence advertisements flourished. The development which this extension of advertising gave to the press of Paris, is illustrated by the enormous sales of the papers published in that city. In 1836, only 20,000,000 stamps were issued. In 1846 [illegible] were issued; and in 1854, the numbers rose to [illegible]. Indeed, the system of advertising is yet in its infancy, not only in France, but in England and the United States.

PARIS GOSSIP.

The "Question D'Argent" of Dumas—Miscellaneous Literary News.

Paris, Monday, March, 9, 1857.

THE MONEY QUESTION.

The Question D'Argent of young DUMAS is still one of the serious considerations of the moment. The criticisms, epigrams and apostrophes it has provoked, would make half a dozen volumes the size of the play itself. EVEN MIRES, the great Jew banker, has written in the columns of his journal, the Constitutionnel, a profession on the subject. It is true he tries to prove that the author of the new piece does not understand the Bourse in all its lights and shades as well as he, Mires, who has made twenty millions there in a very few years; but his rentiérisme, which is his first literary attempt, none the less gives renown and notoriety to the author criticised. The piece of DUMAS makes no pretensions either to plot, to situations, or to any of the ordinary by-play for dramatic effect. Unlike his other works, compromised female character forms no part of the play. It is a quiet, but powerful criticism on the intemperate mania for money, in which the whole success of the piece is concentrated in the force and the bearing of the words spoken. Of the whole four of the younger DUMAS' plays, it is the only one that could be literally translated for the stage of London or New York. The piece will soon be produced in London, which is the first time this author has ever succeeded in getting before a London audience. Even your modified American Camille—that of Miss Davenport, the most modified of all—was rejected by the London censors.

You recollect the "basket of peaches," a figure of speech in the Demi Monde which had so great a success. The author has attempted to profit by this sort of episodic writing in the Question D'Argent, as you will see by the two following extracts from the third act: De Coqueville, a rich railroad speculator, to Olivier Jobel, a man of leisure, lessons on the necessity of every man doing something for the State.

"Listen to my plan," says De Coqueville, "for a civil conscription. It is a conscription of my own invention, and one of the simplest things in the world. It will serve as a pendant to the military conscription, and may even replace it, for it is probable that, in a given time, all the nations of the earth will be united by interest, the arts, commerce, industry, and that war will disappear from this world; when that period arrives, society will demand no more of men than the infinite of their intellectual capacities. When a man arrives at the age of twenty-one years, the State will go to him, and say: 'Sir, what career have you embraced? What do you do for mankind?' 'Nothing, Sir.' 'Ah! do you wish to work?' 'No, Sir, I do not wish to work.' 'Very well—then you have a fortune?' 'Yes, Sir.' 'In that case, Sir, you are liberty not to work, but you must find a substitute. You are going to give a certain sum annually in order that people who have no fortune shall work for you, and we will give you a certificate of instance, with which you can circulate freely.'"

De Coqueville explains the invention of bills of exchange. "When work, that first law of humanity, shall become general, (by the new law of conscription,) he is, indeed, money, specie will become insufficient in quantity to represent it, and it is possible that this currency will be suppressed. That seems to you impossible, like all undiscovered things; but one day it will be as simple as any discovery that has been made. Listen: formerly, we will suppose, a Parisian bought a country house at Marseilles for a hundred thousand francs. What did he do? He put his hundred thousand francs in cash in a diligence, and sent them to the seller, escorted by a special guard. On the road highwaymen attacked the diligence, killed the guards and shared the money. Other guards were sent in pursuit of the robbers, and another battle took place. At last, the robbers being taken, they were hung, and society was avenged; but it follows that that was an enormous amount of trouble and expense to buy a country house. One day a gentleman, who had a large sum to pay at a great distance, and who was an honorable man, said to himself: 'But what is the use of taking so much trouble and incurring so much expense in sending this large sum of specie to my creditor, who, if he owes it to another, will be obliged to do the same thing, and so on to others? Was is the use of damaging so many pieces of gold and so many robbers? I am going to keep the money at home, and write to my creditor that I will pay it to him at his first requisition; if he has to come sum to pay, he will send my letter to that person and thus my letter may make the voyage around the world, without the capital changing its place! This gentleman had simply conceived the idea of the bill of exchange, and from that day the public commenced to understand that money was almost nothing, and that credit was everything."

THE DEGRADATION OF THE LITTERATEURS.

Young DUMAS is right in attacking this question of money. He was right too in standing aloof from the great literary dinner of MILLAUD, the money-god. Since the close of literary men came into existence, there never was such an example of mammon-worship as this. Two weeks ago, MILLAUD, as I have already told you, gave a Babylonian feast to the journalists and literary men of Paris. But a few years ago this banker was but an obscure Jew, who lived in a garret, and had not often a sou to buy his dinner with. By a series of fortunate stock operations he has risen to the position of a millionaire, and once arrived at that position he now seeks notoriety. His first movement to this end was to buy a journal. In his first attempts he failed, but finally he obtained the majority of the shares in the Presse, those held by M. DE GIRARDIN, at the enormous price of $165,000. But this did not suffice, and M. MILLAUD determined to make a bold stroke for popularity and notoriety, in giving a grand fête to the journalists and littérateurs of the town. They were all invited to the number of three or four hundred. The golden hotel of the Place St. George's received new additions and new beauties to its already gorgeous decorations. The fête was in every respect a grand affair.

Before the event came off a report had gained circulation that each convive was to find under his plate a thousand franc bill. To this report M. MILLAUD attributes the abstention of many of the really distinguished men invited: the two DUMAS, JULES JANIN, M. DE GIRARDIN and others; but one is surprised that any man believing such a report could have so far forgotten his dignity as to attend. And yet in the long list of those who bit at this open bid for popularity, we see the names of MERY, PONSARD, Baron TAYLOR, the Duke of St. SIMON, THEOPHILE GAUTIER, EMILE AUGIER, ARSENE DE CERNIA, GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC, PAUL DE ST. VICTOR, CREMIEUX, MICHEL LEVY, MENTOR ROQUEPLAN and a host of other men of high standing in the world of letters.

But now see the result of this affair. Ever since the great event, the journals and the public are filled with M. MILLAUD. You cannot open a printed sheet that does not sing the praises of M. MILLAUD in song, in prose, or in toast. But the most humiliating part of this exhibition has been afforded by M. MERY. This gentleman, a member of the French Academy, and one of the first of living poets, not only prostrated himself before the golden calf, but he made a speech at the dinner in glorification of mammon, and its representative, the host. To render his position still more humiliating, he subsequently published a feuilleton in the Presse on the pow defunct Frascati's, in which there were whole columns of brilliant poetic improvisations and classical allusions, and which he terminated by saying that all this was spiritually recounted to him by M. MILLAUD, the new proprietor of that once famous house! So M. MILLAUD has gained his point. He has subjugated the men who manufacture popularity, and he can now take his seat in the classic sanctuary erected by MERY, PONSARD, and others of the immortals who occupy the fauteuils of the Academy of France!

After that who will dare to resist the power of the golden god?

OTHER CURIOSITIES OF THE MONEY QUESTION.

From the question of money one falls naturally into the Bourse. Since the advent of the tourniquets and the franc entrance fee into that sacred temple, a singular sort of human telegraph has been invented for a non-paying communication between the agents in the inside and their clients under the trees. When the agent wishes instructions he rushes to the side portico, and forming with his hands a kind of speaking trumpet, he thus shouts to his clients in a cabalistic jargon only understood by themselves, and receives his instructions in the same way. For some time this was carried on without a suspicion on the part of the officers of the character of communication that was going on; and when at last the truth was established, they hesitated as to their duty in the premises. But the Prefect of Police did not long hesitate, and now this ingenious dodging of the tourniquet has been abolished.

During the month of January, as I believe I have already told you, there were 1,990 yearly subscriptions to the entrance of the Bourse taken. The price of subscription is 250 a year. The sum total of money taken for that month was [illegible]. On the list of yearly subscribers each name must be followed by a mention of the profession of the owner, and this list shows some curious facts. Not to speak of bankers, merchants, clerks, etc., etc., who naturally form the major part of the subscribers, one sees the following: 1 astronomer, 15 hair-dressers, 3 vaudeville writers, 41 porters, 11 restaurant servants, 3 cow-keepers, 7 actors, 19 doctors, 1 lawyer, 1 lyrical poet, 108 journalists, 1 sandwichman, 1 ramasseur de bouts de cigare—(picker up of cigar stumps!)

The gatherer of "old sojers" cannot be classed under the head of a speculator; for his commerce is based on sure and certain chances, on the real daily products of the place. Each day will give him from 1,500 to 2,000 ends of cigars, and as these command a handsome price at the snuff and tobacco manufacturers, his industry is surer of handsome returns than that of the class who furnish it.

The Bourse of Paris possesses one feature of speculation to which your Exchange is a stranger. A certain number of agents are named by the Government—60, I believe—who have the sole right to speculate within the interior of the bar of the Bourse, and who regulate the rises and the falls. They almost uniformly become millionaries, and, of course, their places are much sought after by all those who are scrambling after a fortune in this way. One of these privileged gentlemen, M. LEMIR, sold his place a few months ago for 1,000,000 francs, and last Spring some of these places were bought at 2,200,000 francs! At this moment one of these agents who wishes to retire to the comforts of a private life, is arranging with a successor at 2,000,000. In 1845, this place was bought for 350,000 francs, so that independent of the immense gains he may have realised in that time, he makes a clear profit on his place of 1,050,000 francs.

But then this money does not all enter into the pocket of the seller. He leaves in the office he abandons, for the wants of his successor, a capital which varies from a half to a million. But for this the price of these places would have never acquired the figure at which we find them. And then there are a limited number of associates, recognised by the chamber of syndics and "interested persons" who may be multiplied indefinitely. All these agencies are more or less subdivided.

This subdivision is easily understood as applied to the great majority of agents, for when a man possesses in France a fortune of 2,000,000 of francs, he is generally ready to retire from business.

But here is another singular feature of this special agent system. They never speculate on the Bourse themselves—so at least they profess. Some time ago a rich man wished to buy an agency, (a rare thing, as I have already shown,) and the Chamber of Syndics refused to receive him into the Company, on the ground that he had made his money playing at the Bourse! And it is not difficult to understand this scruple on the part of the authorised agents. They are trusted with the millions of their clients throughout France. Their business is to buy and sell—for a per cent.—so as to gain the most money possible for their clients. If they were to allow themselves to be drawn into the vortex of speculation on their own account, they might become ruined, and in the ruin might also crumble the fortunes intrusted to them by their clients. If one such event occurred per year, it would destroy the profession, for no one would longer have confidence in an agent de change. If an agent was sure of gaining a million in any enterprise whatever, he would gain it for his clients and not for himself. The Chamber will not even admit a repentant into their midst; for, like CÆSAR's wife, they must not be suspected.

The Academy of Medicine—April Meeting.

The regular meeting of the New-York Academy of Medicine was held Wednesday evening, Dr. VALENTINE MOTT, President, in the Chair. A large number of members were present. Dr. J. HUGHES BENNETT, of Edinburg, Scotland, and E. H. PARKER, of Dartmouth, N. H., were elected corresponding members. Several resident members were also elected. Dr. ISAACS also read a valuable paper detailing the results of his original anatomical investigations respecting the height of the pleura above the clavicle, and its width at that point. The facts presented were upon a point overlooked by anatomists and writers generally, although of great importance to the surgeon and pathologist, as well as curious matter for the anatomist. The facts presented were the results of observations upon one hundred bodies. The chief fact elicited was, that there was great variation in the height to which the pleura rose, corresponding somewhat to the length of the neck of the individual and the sex, and that it was diverse upon the two sides—facts of no little practical importance. The deviations of the subclavian artery and its branches, was also in this connection adverted to. The paper was referred to the Publishing Committee.

THE MEMORY OF DR. KANE.

The Committee appointed at the last meeting to prepare suitable resolutions respecting the death of Dr. E. K. KANE, reported. Dr. FRANCIS, the Chairman, stated that since the Academy had done him the honor of appointing him to this duty, he had departed from his usual manner and had prepared some imperfect expression of his feelings.

Dr. FRANCIS proceeded to read as follows:

As a member of the Committee appointed by the Academy to offer for your adoption, should they meet your approving decision, resolutions on the death of the late Dr. ELISHA KENT KANE, I can scarcely withhold a remark or two on this melancholy occurrence. The occasion is one of profound consideration. The lamentable fact of his early death has now become widely known, and wherever known is regretted with a sorrow that has scarcely limitation, and is felt as almost a personal bereavement. The expressions of that grief have been already diffused throughout our vast Republic, and never has an individual character, unassociated with the dignities of high official station, received loftier commendation from the national voice. His death seems to have reached the hearts of the entire American people and will doubtless be sympathized with by the wise and the good of the Eastern world. I consider the late Dr. KANE to have been one of the most remarkable men of his time, and to have already been recognized as such. His physical and mental energies are hardly to be found recorded in the ample page of Biography. With a constitution singularly delicate and refined, with a corporal development that gave no special tokens of great muscular strength, of a size below the ordinary height,—slender, susceptible and of quick movement,—he evinced a power and capacity for laborious service and marvelous endurance in trial beyond that which the stoutest and the strongest have shown. Though what might be popularly called a diminutive man, he was of fair proportions, of compact elements, comely and attractive in appearance. I betray in no wise the confidence of friendship, when I state, what I derived from his own lips just before his last departure from New-York, that his greatest weight had been 97 pounds, and that during a portion of his Arctic career it did not exceed 98 pounds.

His intellect was of a peculiar order, alert, rapid in combination, and of large foresight. He was analytic and synthetic. His range of thought was wide, his combinations singularly immediate. The simple and the compound were equally open to his perceptions. Early disciplined in the schools of literary and scientific instruction, with such faculties, his acquisitions were great and various. To a fair scholarship in the ancient languages, he added the sciences of astronomy, navigation, natural history, in its several relations of botany, mineralogy, geology, chemistry and the departments of physics which fall within the compass of a liberal medical education. He was an artist; he was an ethnologist. He was a searcher after truth, an explorer of the mysteries of nature, and perilled life in his devotion, with the daring of a soldier, and the stimulus of a scientific adventurer. He studied philosophy, as the handmaid to useful purposes. His confidence rarely halted, however surrounded with difficulties. On the contrary, unexpected occurrences were no obstacles, but met with new devices; and assurances of hope, presaged in the midst of conflicting issues. He was a mighty traveler; had seen men and cities widely remote; had known vicissitudes of divers climes, and miraculously survived the scourge of pestilence in its worst hideousness in China, Java, and Ceylon, the Pacific and [illegible] Nile, loathsome Africa, lovely [illegible] and her antiquities, were his prepared [illegible] unfolded the handiwork of [illegible] he surveyed a pyramid. He was a disciplinarian [illegible] rare indeed that you encounter [illegible] individual of his cosmopolitan expanse on [illegible] intellectual talents were most engaging; terse [illegible] and sententious; prompt in utterance [illegible] imaginative; he secured an audience at will [illegible] convictions of his own belief and his ar[illegible] As his speech was the auditor of his eloquent [illegible] and was glowing, so too we find his [illegible] and vigorous, united with a bewitching [illegible] ing our comprehension and fathoming the heart. No writer of fiction has assumed a finer sentiment than he betrays in his narrative of the Arctic explorations. His work has become a fire-side companion, and the icy world grows familiar as the parlor story or the devotional hymn. Youth forsakes his school-boy recreations to study its astounding incidents, and listening old age marvels how long it has been kept ignorant of the wonders of Providence. Tears are shed at the record of his multitudinous hardships—how many have burst from his own anguished eyes at the sufferings of mortals he has met amidst the vicissitudes of his adventurous life!

Dr. KANE was too guileless to be able to conceal the benevolence of his nature, and his manly sensibility gushes forth spontaneously whenever the noble incidents of humanity are commended into action. I am told he was a rapid writer; that he sequestered himself, after his last return, within the apartments of his library, greatly to the detriment of his already wasted health, in order to bring forth his captivating volumes at brief successes, for the gratification of an anxious public, and it is wonderful to think that while in the Arctic regions, with all its horrors, with his disabled crew, and himself wounded, and the victim of disease, he could have penned such beautiful thoughts, so abounding in imagery and in description, always subjected to a harmoniously religious meditation. How eminently practical he was in every need, in every reverse! How admirably he preserved the integrity of those three special rules which he adopted upon his embarkation! They were rigidly adhered to through all the vicissitudes of the expedition. He adds: "We had no other laws."

I have spoken of his physical powers and of his intellectual qualities: let the glance at those of the heart. This organ which I may say constitutes the microcosm of man in his social state, in Dr. KANE was by nature tender and devotional, and by culture had become possessed of the great elements of Christian philosophy. Modesty and humility found favor within his breast. With a fortitude and a perseverance that would have entitled him to the admiration of a Zeno, he had the winning simplicity and tenderness of the gentler sex. In his most familiar converse no word dropped from his lips at which even fastidious modesty could be annoyed, and to his own transporting achievements he rarely made reference unless to satisfy the curious inquirer; for he it understood that the interests of humanity far outweighed in his generous bosom commercial extension or geographical knowledge. The plaudits of mortals were less in his estimation than the approving smiles of heaven. He was in the amplest acceptation of the term a philanthropist. While memory retains her seat, so long shall I cherish the recollection of his enthusiastic utterance to his noble friend HENRY GRINNELL, in reference to the then still hopeful prospect of the recovery of Capt. FRANKLIN and his companions. It yields untold comfort to my anxious mind, involved in the cares of professional toil, sometimes to remember that while a child I had seen ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, the first white man who traced his way across the Rocky Mountains and gazed upon the Pacific Ocean; that I cherish a personal knowledge of Capt. FRANKLIN and his companions and biographer, Dr. RICHARDSON; and that KANE, an American explorer, who was the first who came within sight of the great Polar Sea, can be recorded as a personal friend.

The eloquent and able eulogist, Rev. G. W. SHINKLE, in his thoughtful and appropriate address, at the interment of Dr. KANE, has beautifully said: "Let us believe that a faith which supported him through trials worse than death, did not fail him when death itself came." Another intimate friend of Dr. KANE thus expresses himself: "But above all,—governing and guiding all,—there was a spirit of true Christian benevolence and Christian dependence. This it was that nurtured and sustained him in times of his greatest suffering and anxiety; this it was that gave him firmness, confidence and power, before which the rudest spirit bowed." Testimony abounds that, though weakened and worn to an extreme degree, his mind rose superior to his physical sufferings, and preserved its faculties entire; that he was conscious of his approaching end, and prepared for the change. His Christian confidence wavered not; the benignity of his nature was edifying throughout all his sufferings; and one of his very last expressions was, that he held in little estimation that man who was afraid to die. Dr. KANE adds another imperishable name to the long catalogue of the members of the noble faculty of physic, who, in their lives and in their deaths, have enriched the panoply of faith by labors in humanity, and who, by their writings, have demonstrated the excellence of the Christian's hope.

The following resolutions were then presented by Dr. MCNULTY:

Resolved, That while the nation recognize in the explorations of Dr. KANE, services honorable to the country and auspicious to humanity, we, his professional brethren, deplore his early death as a loss to our entire profession, of which he was one of the most distinguished ornaments.

Resolved, That the benevolent enterprise and the scientific enthusiasm he so nobly manifested, are the great principles of action which ought to mark the character of our profession and reflect glory on its members.

Resolved, That the self-devotion, assiduity, and moral courage of the navigator were combined in him with the humane sympathies and the observant study of the philosophic physician.

Resolved, That the valuable contributions to natural history, to navigation, astronomy, and the laws of hygiene as affected by extremes of climate, made by Dr. KANE in his Arctic researches, and their deeply interesting record, place him among the most eminent cultivators of practical knowledge on the roll of modern physicians.

Resolved, That while we honor him as a man, we mourn him as a brother, and deeply sympathize with his afflicted family, to whom, in token of sincere and respectful confidence, a copy of these resolutions be transmitted.

JOHN W. FRANCIS, M. D.,
A. CLARK, M. D.,
J. MCNULTY, M. D.

After the reading it was voted that the address and resolutions be transmitted to the family and be recorded in the minutes of this meeting.

PUERPERAL FEVER.

Dr. J. W. FRANCIS, deputed to open the discussion upon the contagiousness of Puerperal Fever, did so at some length. He advocated the contagiousness of its character and its specific origin with much earnestness, but somewhat briefly; he adverted to the views of the older writers, that it was considered to be a fever like ordinary fevers, but differing in its locality, until GORDON, in 1795, commenced a controversy not yet finished.

He was followed by Dr. J. M. SMITH, who considered it to be not sui generis, but evidently contagious. Dr. S. read a labored essay, of some hour or more long, giving a résumé of the literature of the past and present day upon the subject.

After a highly interesting meeting, the Academy adjourned at a late hour, to a special meeting, on Wednesday, the 15th inst., further to discuss this subject.

Relief for Broadway.

The public have recently been startled with the intelligence from Albany, that the Legislature are likely to pass a bill, chartering a Company to lay down a railroad from Forty-ninth-street to Fulton-street, running parallel to Broadway, on the west—extending through a part of Seventh-avenue, and a part of Broadway, through Union-place, University-place, Waverley-place, Greene-street, &c., &c., to Fulton-street.

The ostensible motive for this project is the relief of Broadway, now choked and encumbered with omnibuses, carriages, carts, &c.

There are many weighty objections to this project, while the argument in its favor is very questionable, if not positively fallacious.

The reasons against it are open, and of very wide application. In the first place, experience has abundantly shown that these railroads degrade the streets through which they run; their rails cut up and embarrass the way; the cars usurp the road; they keep the pavements in a state of constant disorder; they make it inconvenient and disagreeable for private carriages to run in these streets, and drive wealthy residents, as well as rich purchasers of merchandize from them.

Hence, property along these railroads is degraded in public estimation, and reduced in pecuniary value. Therefore, along the whole line of the proposed railroad, from Forty-ninth-street to Fulton-street, the property owners are opposed to this scheme.

Besides these special objections, there are others more pervading and permanent. These railroads are monopolies; they are taking privileges from the many and granting them to the few. There is, therefore, an inherent and wise aversion to them in the community—only to be overcome by manifest public necessity. This necessity has not been shown. At the same time, several causes are in operation to stimulate this natural objection to any new monopoly, and especially to this one. The rail cars in this city, to a great extent, are badly managed; they do not adapt themselves to the public wants; they are often crowded to suffocation; they are, in many cases, unwholesomely filthy; their management is often attended with impertinence and imposition. These generous grants of the people have become public nuisances in many cases. And yet, anchored in chartered privileges, these companies pocket their pence, laugh in their sleeves and set the public at defiance.

These are some of the objections against these City Railroads in general, and the proposed one in particular.

It is obvious, therefore, that, as well on the grounds of justice as general policy, no new Charter should be granted, unless its utility—nay its necessity—be first demonstrated. Neither of these points have been settled. It has not been shown that if the streets proposed to be given up to a Railroad, were well paved and made the line for omnibuses and carts going down town, would not give equal relief to Broadway.

It has it even been shown that the proposed Railroad would secure this object. It would, probably, have the opposite effect. The cars would engross three miles in extent, some three miles in extent, parallel to Broadway. For this whole distance it would drive private carriages, wagons, and other vehicles, into Broadway, and thus make confusion worse confounded.

It would seem to be an set of extraordinary folly for the Legislature to adopt such a scheme as the one proposed, until it has been fully examined and discussed by those most interested—the citizens of New-York City. Opportunity for such discussion has not been given, and hence, it is reasonable to suppose, that the proposed project will be deferred to some future session of the Legislature.

A REPUBLICAN OF THE OLD SCHOOL.

HARVARD COLLEGE.—A friend informs the Watchman and Reflector that a gracious Divine influence appears to be reaching this ancient seat of learning. Five students have recently turned to Christ, and others are more or less deeply impressed. Professor HUNTINGTON, under the expressed conviction that "Jesus of Nazareth is passing by," has established a prayer meeting for the special benefit of those under his spiritual charge. The above record is significant, as following so soon the prayer day for colleges and other institutions of learning. Let Harvard University continue to be remembered in earnest prayer by all them who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."—Christian Inquirer.

A Tribune Strain.

"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
Tribune, March 28.

That strain again, the same old song,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
It rings with a clang, like a Chinese gong,
"Whatever is, is sure to be wrong;"
Whoever don't to the Tribune belong
"Is always wrong—grievously wrong."
The Tribune's talk
Is like an old fork
With only one rusty prong.
"You are all wrong—grievously wrong,"
On this one point the Tribune's strong,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
It never varies this dull ding-dong,
"Whatever is, is always wrong."
The Tribune's cry, it's short and it's long,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
It never appears its neighbors among,
Without the yell "you are all wrong."
To Gentile and Jew it cries "go 'long,
You all are wrong—grievously wrong."
It turns up its nose at Bohea and Souchong,
And declares that both are grievously wrong.
Will it never change its dismal song,
But still the stale old groan prolong,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong!"

Burning of the Saltana.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

As some particulars have been published of the destruction by fire, lately, of the steamer Saltana, on the Mississippi River, it may not be uninteresting to your readers to learn the whole of the circumstances as they occurred under the eye of one of the passengers. This ill-fated boat was one of the larger class, being probably three hundred feet in length, a fine vessel, though she had served out the greater portion of her time as seaworthy. The accident occurred on the night of Wednesday, the 25th of March, between 6 and 10 o'clock, about two miles below Hickman, Ky., and thirty-five below the mouth of the Ohio. I was sitting near the rear end of the main saloon, while the forward portion was occupied by a number of card and gambling tables in full blast, with etcetera, when suddenly the gratification of the absorbing passion was brought to a pause, and the sound of the "fiddle," and the boisterous laugh, and the "betting," and the horrid oath were exchanged for the shrieks of terror and the appalling cry of "Fire!" The first notice of our danger was conveyed by some ladies rushing forward from the hinder part of their cabin and calling for water. The fire commencing in that part of the boat, below, had already made its appearance in some portion of their state-rooms. Instantly the alarm was communicated throughout the vessel, and a general rush was made towards the foremost part. Seeing no signs of danger, I did not at first fully realise the condition of things, and did not partake in the general panic, but went calmly to my room and stopped for a moment to consider whether I should attempt to save my baggage. I was soon convinced, however, that not a moment was to be lost, as on opening the door of my room connecting with the balcony or side promenade, I found unmistakable signs of the rapid progress of the devouring element. The bow of the boat was swinging swiftly around, and heading for the right bank of the river, which was lighted up by the glare of the flames from beneath, while shouts and cries, and the dashing of the vessel, and the roaring of the fire, mingled in wild confusion. I caught up my overcoat, carpet-bag, and umbrella, and determining, if possible, to save my trunk, I seized one end of it, and hurried forward to the gangway. By this time the boat had grained the bank, making a tremendous plunge into it, and was kept from rebounding by the force of the engine, until secured. Most fortunately it proved to be a partially shelving bank, that might be climbed without much difficulty. As the most of the passengers had already preceded me in the early rush, and were now ashore, leaving the way comparatively clear, I rushed down the stairway, still dragging my trunk, and thus, with a number of others, likewise succeeded in gaining the bank, when, for the first time, something like a thrill of horror came over me, as I looked around, and saw the hideous fate we were escaping. By this time the fire had rapidly advanced, and the greater portion of the vessel was enveloped in flames. In fact, so rapid was the work of destruction, that, while I was still struggling, with the aid of another, to get my trunk up the steep bank, an explosion of a boiler took place. It was feared, for a time, that a few persons, in their precipitancy, had rushed from the boat, before it was secured to the bank, and had been either drowned or crushed to death, but, I rejoiced to find that these fears proved groundless, as it was afterwards confidently affirmed that no lives were lost. Happily there were but few ladies and children on board, of these a few had retired, and had narrowly escaped in their night-clothes. The most of the passengers lost their baggage, and with it their money. The fire was said to have originated in the room of the watchman, but the accounts were various and conflicting. The conduct of the officers and hands belonging to the boat appeared to be every thing that the trying emergency demanded. At this part of the river the channel was on the right side ascending, and we were happily not many rods from the bank. It was soon found that the tiller-rope was burned in two, and the wheel consequently useless. In this fearful crisis we were saved by the firmness and presence of mind of the engineer, who is worthy of the substantial gratitude of all on board. He continued at his post until he had turned the head of the boat to the land, then turning on the whole power of the steam, he sought safety with the rest. The fire was observed by the people of Hickman, and immediately a large crowd of persons proceeded to the scene of the disaster. The passengers and crew remained some time on the bank, when they were kindly relieved by a small steamer which took them up to the neighboring town, where they awaited other steamers bound upward.

Confession of a Wife Murderer—Burning of the Body by the Husband.

From the Toledo Commercial, April 6.

Through the politeness of our worthy Sheriff, S. J. STRINGER, Esq., we last evening paid a visit to R. J. M. WARD, who gave us the following confession in relation to the murder of his wife: WARD seemed to be deeply affected, frequently interrupting his disclosure by exclamations of deep sorrow and regret for the crime he had committed, and giving us a full and complete disclosure of the same. After taking down his confession, we read the same to him, when he pronounced it correct; we give it to our readers as we had it from his own lips, in the presence of the Sheriff and others:

CONFESSION.

"On Tuesday evening, Feb. 3, Mrs. WARD and myself had some words, during which Mrs. WARD struck me on the head with a fluid lamp, also on the right side of the nose, causing the same to bleed freely. I begged her not to strike me, took the lamp away from her and went to bed. We arose between 6 and 7 o'clock on Wednesday morning. I spoke to her about the blow she had given me, showing her where she had struck me on the evening previous, also the blood on the bolster and tick. She said she wished I had bled to death, and picking up a stick of hickory wood, she attempted to strike me. I warded off the blow, which fell upon my right thumb, laming it severely. The stick fell from her hand, and she stooped to pick it up, I seized a flat iron, and in the heat of passion, struck her with it on the right side of the head, upon and under the ear, driving the ear-ring into the flesh. She fell to the floor, exclaiming, 'Oh! WARD, you have killed me!' I dropped the flat-iron and went to her; she was lying on her side; I turned her over on her back, and placed a petticoat under her head, supposing she was only stunned. I used all means in my power to restore her, but in half an hour she died, having only spoken once, 'O, my Nellie,' meaning, as I suppose, her little girl.

After she was dead, I wrapped her head in a petticoat and drew her body under the bed, to conceal it in case any one should come in. About 8½ o'clock, WM. H. NAYMAN, a mulatto boy, came to the door with some milk; came into the shop, took the milk from him and he left. I then went to LIBA ALLEN'S grocery, bought a pound of sugar. Told him I was going away. I then returned to the house, and after a short time commenced cutting up the body. I tore the clothes open from the throat down. I then took a small pocket knife and opened the body; took out the bowels first, and then put them in the stove, upon the wood; they being filled with air, would make a noise in exploding, so I took my knife and pricked holes through them, to prevent the noise; then took out the liver and heart, and put them in the stove; found it very difficult to burn them; had to take the poker and frequently stir them, before they could be destroyed; found the lungs very much decayed. I then took out the blood remaining in the cavity of the body by placing a copper kettle close to the same, and scooping it out with my hands. I then dipped portions of her clothing in the same and burnt it together, fearing, if I put the blood in the stove alone, that it might be discovered. I then made an incision through the flesh, along down each side, broke off the ribs and took out the breast bone, and throwing it into a large boiler, unjointed the arms at the shoulders, doubled them up and placed them in the boiler; then severed the remaining portions of the body by placing a stick of wood under the back and breaking the backbone over the same, cutting away the flesh and ligament with a knife; then tried to sever the head from the body; it proving ineffectual, and I put the whole upper portion of the body into the boiler; then took a large carving knife and severed the lower portion of the body, unjointed the legs at the knee and again at the hip joint; cut the thighs open and took out the bones and burnt them up; they burned very rapidly.

On Thursday night I commenced burning the body, by placing the upper and back portions of the same, together with the head, in the stove. On Friday morning, finding it had not been consumed, I built a large fire by placing wood around and under it, and in a short time it was wholly consumed, except some portions of the larger bones and of the skull. The remaining portions of the body were kept in the boiler and in tubs, under the bed, covered up with a corded petticoat, and were there at the time the first search was made on Saturday, by Constable OTHEIS.

Hearing on Saturday evening that the citizens were not satisfied with the search made by Mr. OTHEIS, I proceeded on Sunday morning to destroy the remainder of the body, by burning the same in the stove, cutting the fleshy parts of the thighs in small strips, the more readily to dispose of them. On Monday morning I took up the ashes in a small bag, sifting out the larger pieces of bone with my hands, placing the same in my overcoat pockets, which I scattered in various places in the fields, at different times. Also took the major portion of the trunk nails, together with the hinges, and scattered them in different places. I then burned her trunk and every vestige of her clothing, disposing of small portions at a time, to prevent their creating too much smoke."

On the 6th inst., R. J. M. WARD, the murderer, was brought in, dressed, as usual, in a full suit of black, appearing much downcast, and as the Court commanded him to stand up, he arose, breathing heavily, his eyes fixed upon the floor, and only momentarily seeking the face of the Judge. With one hand he leaned heavily on the chair, while the other hung tremblingly at his side.

After the Judge had pronounced sentence of death, WARD knelt down, and, leaning on the chair, buried his face in his hands, weeping and groaning. He was suffered to remain thus for a few moments, as the forms of adjourning Court till afternoon were gone through with, when Sheriff STRINGER touched him on the shoulder, and he arose, apparently much more composed, and was taken to the jail.

Arrest of a Forger.

From the Rochester Union, 7th.

A young man, probably from the West originally, appeared in this city yesterday with his pockets filled with spurious drafts. He arrived in the morning and took lodgings at the Waverley, where he entered his name on the register of the Hotel as "J. R. MONTOR, Illinois." He managed to get an introduction to a young gentleman boarding at the Waverley, and through him was introduced to Mr. PALMER, teller of the City Bank. He there sold a draft for $400 on the Bank of America, purporting to be drawn by BAGNOT, HASTINGS & CO., of Independence, Mo.

In the course of yesterday, Mr. SACKETT met this fellow in the street and identified him as G. W. MOODY, whom he had known in New-Orleans. Mr. S. called at the Waverley and inquired if a gentleman named MOODY was there. He was answered by the clerk in the negative, but on a description being given, he pointed to the name of MONTOR on the register as likely to be the man. SACKETT left his card and went out. When the stranger came in he was told that Mr. SACKETT, who had known him in New-Orleans, had called. The man said he did not know any person by that name and had never been in New-Orleans. Some time later in the day SACKETT met the man and recognized him.

The fellow said he was not stopping at the Waverley, but at the Eagle. They walked along State street together, when they came to the Waverley the New-Orleans gentleman refused to go in, as he proposed, but insisted upon going to the Eagle, where he lodged. SACKETT left him, and having ascertained that his baggage was at the Waverly, and that he had stopped there, he suspected that something was wrong, and expressed his doubts at the hotel. The party who had introduced him at the Bank inquired, and ascertained that a draft had been purchased of the man and mailed for New-York.

Policeman JENKINSON was informed of the facts, and he waited upon the stranger and told him that he suspected that he was a rogue. MONTOR, or MOODY, said he was willing to refund the $400 if the Bank was not satisfied. So he went to the residence of the teller with Mr. JENKINSON and refunded. Mr. J. then told him he should hold him for further inquiry. He therefore took him to the Sheriff's office, and subsequently to the police office. His baggage was also seized and taken to the police office.

After some parleying, the man confessed that his name was G. W. MOODY, and said he had latterly boarded at the Howard House, New-York, but came to Syracuse with his wife on a visit, and so came up here to sell some drafts, leaving his wife at Syracuse meanwhile. Mr. JENKINSON went to Syracuse last night and ascertained that he had a wife visiting there, as he stated. On searching him about $180 in good notes on the Artisans' and Park Banks, of New-York were found, and five drafts, purporting to have been drawn by BOGNOT, HASTINGS & CO., Independence, Mo., on different banks, and in favor of different persons, as follows: $1,600, payable to GEO. H. HANKIN, at the Fulton, New-York; $500, payable to same party at the Bowery Bank, New-York; $500, to WM. H. LEWIS, payable at the Corn Exchange Bank, New-York; $500, payable to the same at the Bank of America, New-York; $800 to same, at same Bank.

In the trunk of MOODY was found two dark books, one in black, the other in blue ink. These books contained hundreds of blank drafts dated at the Banking House of BOGNOT, HASTINGS & CO., at Independence, ready to be filled up at any time.

The handwriting of MOODY on the hotel register, in nowise resembled that of the signatures and filling up of the drafts; hence it is concluded that he has an accomplice. These, we believe, are all the principal facts which have come to light so far in connection with this attempt at financering. MOODY was committed to jail to await further examination, when more testimony has been procured.

The Murder in Washington County, Penn.—Further Particulars.

The Pittsburg Post has the following additional particulars:

It seems that SAMUEL H. WHITE, of Chartiers township, who formerly resided within two miles of the village of Venice, had recently purchased a farm from Mr. JAMES ALLISON for $2,600; that he had removed his wife and two children to their new home about a month since; that he was to make a payment to Mr. ALLISON about the first of April; that Mrs. WHITE, being unwell on Saturday night, got up about 3 o'clock, left her husband asleep, and went into the back yard; that she heard a noise, ran into the kitchen, and soon after saw two men come into the room where her husband slept; that she, filled with terror, fled to Mr. ALLISON'S, about half a mile distant; that she soon returned, with two of the Allison's, and found her husband dead in his bed, his head having been literally crushed in with an axe taken from their own wood pile; that about $700 were taken from a drawer, and $50 left untouched in Mr. WHITE's coat; and that the children remained unhurt in a little bed in their father's room.

Intense excitement followed the announcement of the murder, and armed men rode in all directions on Monday. About 7 o'clock Monday morning, a man named BALDWIN, who had left Washington on Sunday night at 11 o'clock, and who was seen to flee from a house in Middletown, about eight miles distant from the scene of the murder, was pursued and arrested. He proved an alibi and was discharged. When asked why he fled at the sight of the officers, he said that he had whipped his wife on Sunday evening, and thought that they were after him for that. His story was found to be correct. Although diligent search was made, no trace of the heartless assassins could be found up to the time our informant left.

Bloody Affray on a Steamboat.

We are called upon to record another bloody scene which occurred on board the steamer A. R. Chambers, a few miles below this city. At a late hour of the night, a party of Irish emigrants to Kansas were amusing themselves on the lower decks with

THE DRED SCOTT DECISION.

Report of the Joint Legislative Committee.

The Joint Committee of the Senate and Assembly instructed to consider and report what measures, if any, the Legislature of this State ought to adopt to protect the Constitutional rights of her citizens against the odious and alarming doctrines of the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision of the case of Dred Scott, respectfully

REPORT:

That they entered upon the discharge of their duty under a deep sense of the importance of the subject committed to their consideration. They could not fail to see, that the sovereignty of our State, the constitutional rights of her citizens, the protection of her free labor, her great commercial, manufacturing and agricultural interests, her extensive educational system, and the morals of her citizens, were all assailed and put in jeopardy by the unconstitutional, anti-republican and Pro-Slavery doctrines announced by the majority of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision of the case mentioned; for these doctrines will bring Slavery within our borders, against our will, with all its unhallowed, soul-destroying and blighting influences.

Your Committee have not been able to obtain authentic copies of the opinions of the five Pro-Slavery Judges, who formed a majority of the Court, and pronounced the unconstitutional doctrines which have so justly alarmed the people of this State. They have, however, abundant evidence of their contents, and of the principles they announce.

There was only one question before the Court for adjudication, and that was, whether Dred Scott was a citizen of the United States. No Judge of the Court had a right, and for less was it his duty, to discuss, decide, or even express an opinion on any other question or subject. Not only judicial decorum, but the express decisions of that very Court, forbade him to pronounce opinions on any question beside the one directly before him. Yet the five Pro-Slavery Judges, in violation of judicial decorum and established precedents, after deciding the case before them, proceeded to discuss and express opinions on five other controverted questions of what importance to the Free States of this Union.

First—They express the opinion that if a Master carries his Slave into a Free State for a temporary sojourn, the Slave does not become Free. This is in direct contradiction to a cherished principle of the common law, that when a Slave places his foot on Free Soil, he becomes a Freeman—a principle dear to the heart of every enlightened citizen of the Free States of our Union; and a principle which has been recognized by the Courts of all these States, by the Courts of most of the Slave States, and by the Supreme Court of the United States itself.

Second—They express the opinion that the Ordinance of 1787—the Magna Charta of Freedom in all the States formed out of the territory northwest of the Ohio—is inoperative and void—an opinion which astonishes the intelligence of the country, and is in direct opposition to the action of the General and State Governments, from their institution.

Third—They declare that the act of Congress admitting the State of Missouri into the Union, known as the Missouri Compromise, was unconstitutional and void; and thereby give the sanction of their tribunal and of the Court, to the unmitigated breach of plighted national faith, accomplished by the repeal of that act.

Fourth—They discuss and express the opinion, that the clause in the Constitution of the United States which declares that "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory, or other property belonging to the United States," only applies to the Territory which belonged to the United States when the Constitution was adopted, and confers no authority on Congress to pass laws regulating Territories acquired since; and thus they deny to Congress the power to exclude Slavery from them, or to authorise a Territorial Government to exclude it; while every well-informed person in the country knows that every Territory which the United States has acquired since the adoption of the Constitution, has been governed by the laws of Congress. The power of Congress over these Territories, and the authority to prohibit Slavery in them, has never been doubted or questioned, till the promulgation of the opinions of the majority of the Court in this case of DRED SCOTT.

Fifth—They declare it to be their opinion, that Slavery is not a local institution. They hold that it is not confined to the States of the State, by the laws of which it is created, but may be carried beyond them and into the Territories of the United States. This opinion is in direct opposition to at least three solemn decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to the decisions of the Courts of all the Free States, and to the decisions of the Courts of most, if not of all, of the Slave States of our Union. It is contrary to one of the fundamental principles of the common law, which is, that every man has an inalienable right to his liberty, and that it can only be taken from him by a statute of the State in which he lives; and every lawyer in the profession of the law knows that the Statute of a State has no force beyond its limits.

It follows as a direct consequence of this doctrine, that a master may take his slave into a Free State without disturbing the relation of master and slave; and your Committee cannot but be alarmed and astonished at the apprehension that some future decision of the Pro-Slavery majority of the Supreme Court will make a slave driver, as threatened by the devotees of Slavery, to call the roll of his manacled gang at the foot of the monument on Bunker Hill, reared and consecrated to Freedom.

The proposition which the majority of the Court laid down in deciding the question legitimately before them, viz.: that no man of the African race, descended from ancestors formerly a slave, is a citizen of the United States, though born a freeman, and his ancestors for many generations before him also freemen, and though thirty-nine parts out of one hundred of the blood which runs in his veins is Anglo-Saxon, and the other, his heart purer, and his head clearer than those of the Judge who outlaws him, and though his father may have fallen in the battle at New-Orleans, on the glorious 8th of January, at the call of our JACKSON, or his grandfather served with honor, or died in battle under our WASHINGTON; is a violation of the sacred principles announced in our Declaration of Independence, hostile to the spirit of our institutions, and the age in which we live, a departure from the liberal doctrines of the common law, and opposed to the delight of judicial authority in this country and enlightened humanity.

Your Committee have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that this decision is erroneous, and ought to be overruled; and they believe it will be overruled as soon as the Free States have their just representation on the bench of these Courts.

The attention of your Committee was arrested by a proposition stated by Chief Justice TANEY in the opinion he delivered, as the organ of a majority of that Court, in the following words: "They (the colored race) have had no rights, which white men were bound to respect." Your Committee cannot forbear to characterize this proposition as inhuman, unchristian, atrocious—disgraceful to the Judge who uttered it, and to the tribunal which sanctioned it.

The most censurable part of the conduct of these Pro-Slavery Judges, yet remains to be stated, and it is this: The five constitutional questions above stated, which were not involved in the point before the Court for decision, and upon which, in violation of judicial decorum and established precedents, they volunteered opinions, have, within the last two years, become political and party questions, have divided the two great political parties of the country; and that division, unfortunately, has assumed a sectional character. These five Judges are all located in the Pro-Slavery section, and identified with the Pro-Slavery party. Under such circumstances, if true manly delicacy, will not, a decent respect for the feelings and opinions of the friends of free institutions, should have restrained them from uttering a single word, not necessary to a decision of the question before them. But how widely different was their conduct! They volunteered, against decorum and precedent, to identify themselves and our great National Court with a sectional party, and to bring down that high tribunal from the lofty place it has hitherto filled in the reverential respect of the nation, to the area of party and sectional strife. They have destroyed the confidence of the people in the Court, by stamping upon it a black mark of sectionalism and partizanship. They have, moreover, placed themselves and the Court they control, in the front rank of Pro-Slavery propagandism, and offensive aggression upon the rights of the Free States.

Your Committee cannot omit to notice, in this connection, the time selected by these five Judges for taking ground, officially, with the Pro-Slavery party of the country. That time was strikingly propitious to protect them from impeachment, and accomplish their purpose. A new Pro-Slavery, sectional Administration was just being inaugurated, and consequently had the whole patronage of the Federal Government to aid in screening these partizan Judges from merited punishment, and produce acquiescence in their ultra Pro-Slavery, unconstitutional doctrines. The fate of Kansas, too, was then impending, and these doctrines, if carried out, would consign her to the deadly embrace of slavery. Your Committee reluctantly admit the thought, that the national ermine was used to cover and effect such an unhallowed purpose; but they have seen too many evidences of the desperate zeal to which Pro-Slavery fanaticism leads men, subject to its influence, to lay aside the fearful apprehension, that our national Court has been brought under its dominion.

The Supreme Court of the United States was established by our forefathers to secure a fair and enlightened exposition of the Constitution, and an independent and impartial adjudication of Constitutional questions; and thereby preserve the rights of the several States and the citizens thereof. The influence and power of the Court having now been marshalled on the side of pro-slavery propagandism, and against the rights of the citizens of the free States, it no longer accomplishes the purpose of its institution. The safety and peace of the nation require its reorganization, so as to admit into it a fair and equal representation from the Free States, according to the ratio of population between the Free and Slave States, which can and ought promptly to be done by act of Congress. Until this measure is accomplished, it is manifestly the duty of this State to take and maintain a firm attitude against the encroachments of Slavery, and keep this direful evil out of her borders.

To this end, your Committee announce and recommend the adoption of the proposition, that Slavery shall never pollute the Free soil of the Empire State, let the consequences be what they may; and in making this declaration, we place the Empire State on the Republican doctrines of 1798, known as the "Virginia Resolutions," which were acquiesced in by the great Republican Party of that day, and are in the following words:

Resolved, That this Assembly doth explicitly and peremptorily declare that it views the power of the Federal Government as resulting from the compact, to which the States are parties, as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact, as no further valid than they are authorized by the grants enumerated in that compact; and that in case of a flagitious, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers, not granted by the said compact, the States, who are the parties thereto, have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining, within their respective limits, the authorities, rights and liberties appertaining to them.

To carry into effect this proposition, your Committee recommend the adoption of the resolutions, herewith presented, and the passage of an act entitled "An Act to secure Freedom to all persons within this State," herewith also presented. ALBANY, April 9, 1857.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That this State will not allow Slavery within her borders, in any form, or under any pretence, or for any time, however short, let the consequences be what they may.

Resolved, That the Supreme Court of the United States, by reason of a majority of the Judges thereof having identified it with a sectional and aggressive party, has lost the confidence and respect of the people of this State.

Resolved, That the Governor of this State be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to transmit a copy of this report, the law above mentioned, and these resolutions, to the respective Governors of the States of this Union.

AN ACT TO SECURE FREEDOM TO ALL PERSONS WITHIN THIS STATE.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SEC. 1. Neither descent, far or remote, from an African, whether such African be, or may have been a slave or not; nor color of skin, shall disqualify any person from being, or prevent any person from becoming, a citizen of this State; nor deprive such person of the rights and privileges of a citizen thereof.

SEC. 2. Every slave who shall come, or be brought, or be, in this State, with the consent of his or her master or mistress, or who shall come, or be brought, or be, involuntarily in this State, shall be free.

SEC. 3. Every person who shall hold or attempt to hold, in this State, in Slavery, or as a slave, any person mentioned as a slave in the second section of this act, or any free person of color, in any form, or under any pretence, or for any time however short, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof, shall be confined in the State prison at hard labor for a term not less than two nor more than ten years.

The Dred Scott Decision in the Ohio Legislature.

The Committee on Federal Relations in the Ohio House made a very full report in relation to the Dred Scott case, on the 1st inst., accompanied with a bill and resolutions.

The bill is to prevent slaveholding and kidnapping in Ohio. It provides:

1. That any person attempting to hold another as a slave, directly or indirectly, shall be fined and imprisoned.

2. That if any person shall seize or arrest, or use any force or fraud for the purpose of detaining any other person upon pretence that such person is a fugitive from service, he shall be punished by fine and imprisonment.

3. That any attempt to kidnap with intent to carry them out of the State, for the purpose of enslaving them, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

4. That the provisions of the bill shall not apply to any act lawfully done by any marshal in the execution of any legal process.

Among the resolutions reported are the following:

That the doctrine also announced in behalf of a majority of the Court, that there exists no power in the General Government to exclude Slavery from the Territories of the United States, subverts express provisions of the Constitution, annuls the just authority of the people of the United States over their own Territories, and contradicts the whole practice of the Government under every Administration, from that of WASHINGTON to that of POLK.

That in the promulgation of the doctrine against which we now protest, we recognize the natural effect of the ascendancy of the Slave power in the Supreme Court of the United States, secured by the arrangement of the Circuits, which gives to the Slave States, with less than one-third of the free population of this Union, five out of nine Judges, leaving to the Free States, with more than two-thirds of the free population, only four; and we hereby instruct our Senators, and request our Representatives in Congress, to use their best endeavors to obtain such a modification of existing laws as will secure to the Free States their just representation in that tribunal.

In addition to this, Senator GRISWOLD has reported to the Senate resolutions which, in view of Kansas outrages, propose $100,000 for the protection of Ohio citizens, to be employed by the Governor as his discretion shall dictate.

THE OPINIONS IN THE DRED SCOTT CASE.—Much inquiry is made in reference to the time when the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case will appear officially before the public. Hitherto only an abstract of the opinion has appeared, as reported for the Associated Press. I learn that the venerable Chief Justice TANEY has not filed his opinion in the clerk's office, but was expected to do so to-day, or on Monday. The reporter of the decisions of the Court, Mr. HOWARD, has in readiness the volume in which the opinion of the several Justices in the Dred Scott case will appear. The volume will be published in this City.

The dissenting opinions of Justices MCLEAN and CURTIS have been spread before the public through the newspapers of Boston and New-York, and before they were filed. They were not obtained from the Clerk's office. As the reporter of the Court is entitled to a copyright, it will be a violation of that right to present the opinions in full in the newspapers. It is not certain, therefore, that the opinion of the Court, as presented by Chief Justice TANEY and Justice NELSON, will reach the public through the popular press, and the impression made by the premature publication of the dissenting opinion will not be fully counteracted. It is unfortunate that the resolution offered in the Senate for printing, for the use of that body, twenty thousand copies of the series of opinions, was not taken up and adopted.—Washington Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

Letter from Governor Wise on the Land Distribution Scheme.

Sundry journals in Virginia are advocating the distribution among the several States of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. Gov. WISE has written the following letter to a friend in condemnation of the scheme:

RICHMOND, Thursday, March 26, 1857.

DEAR SIR: * * * I presume that no one is chimerical enough to think of proposing a redivision of the public lands themselves. Such a proposition at this time would be virtually to commence to dissolve the Union. It would be impracticable, if lawful, and the latter is as untenable as the former, unless there be a dissolution of the Union. I am opposed to this, because opposed to disunion. The question must be treated, then, as a proposition to dispose of the proceeds of land and customs in the Treasury; undistinguishable masses of money there, as a surplus, from time to time, may arise. But two modes of disposing of surplus in the Treasury, other than is pointed out in the Constitution, have been proposed, and each has been tried. Deposit with the States, and distribution to the States. The objections to both are insuperable.

Money in the treasury is not distinguishable by—

First—The source from whence it comes. Whether it comes from land or customs, its use is defined by the Constitution, and it is a common fund for national appropriation.

The land fund has two sources:

1. Cessions—deeds by States to the United States.
2. Acquisitions, by
1. Purchase, or
2. Conquest.

The deeds express that the object of their cession is, "for the general charge and expenditure,"—a phrase equivalent to the provision of the Constitution respecting customs, "to provide for the common defence and general welfare," &c.

And the acquisitions were generally and originally made by expenditures out of the Treasury from money collected from customs—certainly from a common fund of money in the fisc for common, general and federal ends.

Nor is money in the Treasury distinguishable by

Second—The ends of the powers of Government.

The land power is to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory (land) or other property of the United States." The cardinal end of this power is the great object of settlement of territory. The end of the revenue power is the regulation of commerce. Money to pay debts even is secondary to that great end of the customs.

Accordingly, the lands have been so administered as to be sold at a price to cheapen homesteads so low as to yield no revenue; or, where revenue has accumulated from the settlement of territory, to aid the other great end of regulating commerce, reducing taxes, and unfettering trade.

Congress, then, whether we look to the sources of revenue or to the ends of governmental powers, can do no more with land funds than with custom funds. If they may give away the former they may the latter.

Third.—There is no surplus from the proceeds of sales of public lands. Debt and credit, cost of purchases, Indian wars, Indian titles, surveys, registering, receiving, pensions, alternate section system, &c., &c., on the one side, and proceeds on the other, and the lands will be found many millions in debt to the customs. Seeing this:

Fourth—In 1836, even Mr. CLAY conceded that there was no surplus from land, and he resorted to deposit, for even he was obliged to concede, also, that a surplus from customs couldn't be distributed, or given absolutely away. The act of 1836 was made perpetual until, or unless the Tariff Compromise of 1833-'33 was disturbed. This condition, unfortunately, carried Mr. CALHOUN. What followed? The Tariff Compromise was immediately broken, and the deposit of the fourth installment was arrested. Another peremptory provision is, that in case of war, or deficiency, or any emergency happening, the deposit with the States should be returned to the Treasury. War with Mexico, which made the country bleed at purse and every pore, came, and though debt and deficiency run up to 120,000,000, yet not a breath about return of deposits to the Treasury was ever heard of. The unrepealed law is dead and unexecuted on the statute book, and there the provision still slumbers out of countenance, to show the immorality, that it was in the very inception "to frustrate Constitution."

Fifth—Again: In 1836, the supposed surplus was $4 millions; $3 millions were distributed, and before 1840, there was a deficiency under Mr. VAN BUREN of 24 millions, and in 1841, the portion distributed is defaulting, i. e., passed a distribution bill, when there was no surplus in the Treasury, showing that multiplied surplus was its want will restrain the abuse of power from making a deficiency itself larger to the usual productive tariff, and to defeat both the ends of the revenue power, Free-trade, and of the land power, the settlement of the West.

Sixth—Again: If Congress may so "regulate" lands as to give them away, so they may "other property," for the two stand together in the same category.

Seventh—The system stimulates extravagance and engenders corruption in the States, as well as at Washington. Virginia got $3,190,000 from her three installments in 1836. What became of it? Did it diminish taxation? Futile and foolish was the hope!—$340,000 only went to State expenditures, and $1,998,000 went to Bank loans, at a time when the amount was appreciable in comparison with State debts and liabilities; and it inflated appropriations so that we ran up our State debt from about 10 or 12 to 35 millions! Taxes increased largely from that very date, and have been steadily rising ever since.

Eighth—The moral argument against looking to the Federal Government for its surplus—and it needs every dollar it now has and more for just and general national objects—the moral argument against calling upon Hercules to put his shoulder to the wheel, is stronger than all the material reasons put together. Teach the people to depend on that mode of making their great works, of lightening their taxburdens, and of paying the public debt, and every nerve of self-reliance and of manly self-exertion will at once be relaxed! You will emasculate your people.

This is but an epitome of what I have not time to elaborate. You have but to go back to the journals of Congress to see my speeches and votes, and my opinions there have not changed, but been fortified by time. Hastily and respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY A. WISE.

Interesting from China.

WHOLESALE POISONING BY THE CHINESE.—SUCCESS OF THE CHINESE AGAINST THE ENGLISH ETC.

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

We are indebted to a gentleman of this city for the following interesting circular letter, giving a succinct account of affairs in and about Canton at the latest dates;

MACAO, Wednesday, Jan. 28, 1857.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our circular of the 12th inst., we have again to record a series of alarms and disasters which, unless soon checked by arrivals of reinforcements or by more vigorous measures of repression than yet shown, must lead to the abandonment by foreigners of the south of China. The Mandarins are now, through their emissaries, employing poison in various forms to effect the destruction of foreigners.

On the 15th instant a Chinese baker, who supplied two thirds of the foreign inhabitants of Hong Kong with bread, mixed arsenic with the supply of that day in such an enormous quantity that he defeated his own object, all who took of it being immediately seized with violent sickness: to this circumstance their preservation is owing, as although more than four hundred foreign residents were very ill, and many, including ladies and children, dangerously so,—no deaths have as yet resulted. On an analysis four grains of Arsenic were found in each ounce of bread. On that morning, prior to the delivery of the bread, the baker and his two foremen absconded, the former was immediately pursued to this place, arrested, and carried back to Hong Kong. The two latter escaped. The workmen, some forty in number, are in prison. The baker is partner of the man who effected the murder of the passengers in the Pristaste, but had been suffered to continue at Hong Kong after examination before a jury of inquest held upon the body of one of those murdered in that steamer.

Since this wholesale poisoning, other attempts have been made by means of poisoned oranges, which have been sent by boatloads to Hong Kong from the main land; attacks upon individuals have been of frequent occurrence; the steamer Queen was near sharing the fate of the Thistle on her passage to this on 23d inst., but the police having received information of the plan dispatched a steamer in pursuit and brought the Queen back to Hong Kong. Too gang on board besides their hidden weapons, and their loose sleeves full of fine sand, mixed with gunpowder, to dash in the face of the foreigners at the moment of attacking them.

It is with the utmost regret that we have to inform you that the English forces have not only abandoned Whampoa, but have been obliged to retreat from their position in front of Canton, and now occupy a fort on the Macao passage some miles below Canton. This complete triumph for the Chinese, though but temporary as we hope, will greatly stimulate their projects for the extirpation of foreigners, and render yet more difficult and protracted the settlement of the present disturbed state of affairs. Immediately upon their withdrawal from Whampoa, the docks, residency, and property of foreigners there were burnt by the Chinese.

The river between Whampoa and the Bogue is swarming with Chinese gun-boats, which in fleets of 60 to 100 attack the man-of-war steamers on their passage either way, and by their light draught of water elude pursuit. The steamer Sampson, a few days since, was cut up and hulled by one of these fleets near the second bar. Being almost on a level with the water, these boats afford hardly any object for the aim of the steamer's guns, while their own pieces are of great range and well directed.

From the North we learn that the Chinese are throwing up batteries at Amoy, and also at Tientsin, the port of Pekin; this latter step points out clearly that the Imperial Government is preparing to accept the local question at Canton as a national quarrel, and we fear we shall soon hear of outbreaks at Shanghai and Fowchow after the report of the success of YEH at Canton reaches Pekin.

The American Consul for Canton has notified American citizens to present to him statements of their losses incurred by the present hostilities.

Advices from Shanghae are to 20th inst. A very active demand and considerable advance in prices of Green Teas is reported, owing to the continued short supplies and apparent confirmation of the teamen's report of there being but a very small quantity to come in for the remainder of the season. Very few teas remained unsold at that date. With the fact of this short supply and the prospect of the war extending to the northern ports, it is unnecessary for us to call your attention to the probability of a great enhancement of value of teas in America and England during the present year. Exchange was at 5s. 9d. Freights to New-York $5 per ton, to England £1 10s. per 50 feet, with an excessive amount of unemployed tonnage. The White Swallow and Endeavor had sailed for New-York. The Carrington was loading and would be dispatched by 25th or 28th inst. The Romance of the Seas was circulated to sail on 5th proximo, "full or not full."

The Golden Racer, from Foochow, for New-York, is a total wreck at the mouth of the River Min. The Pigeney had been on shore but got off.

The Mail of 10th December, from London, with advices from the United States to end of November, is hourly expected. We remain, your obedient servants,

JAMES PURDON & CO., of Canton.

Our Relations with China.

From the National Intelligencer, April 6.

We have recently more than once had occasion to refer to the quarrel which has arisen between Great Britain and the Chinese, as well as to the negotiations which, it is understood, have been determined upon by the former, with the view of obtaining from the latter certain privileges deemed advantageous not only to the interests of commerce, but also to the better maintenance of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

In the purposes and objects of this movement, as initiated and prosecuted by England, the Government of France is understood to sympathize and cooperate, the alliance between these Powers on the "Chinese Question" being complete; and, as has been already intimated in our columns, it is also believed that our Government has been invited by Great Britain to unite in the "demonstration" which she, in conjunction with France, is now making for the acquisition of new concessions at the hand of the Chinese Emperor—concessions which it is not proposed to extort at the cannon's mouth, but to win by the suasion of a peaceful diplomacy, pleading in the interests of commerce and international polity.

Prominent among the ends which it is hoped to secure is the concession of the privilege, heretofore denied, that the ambassadors of foreign Powers with which China entertains diplomatic intercourse should reside at Pekin, near the Imperial Government to which they are accredited.

As we have already said, it seems to us that this is a legitimate subject of peaceful negotiation, and, tending as such directness of communication necessarily would to a better understanding between China and foreign Governments than can possibly exist under the present system, we see no serious objection to a participation on the part of our Government in the object thus brought to its consideration, provided, of course, it can be done without complicating the United States with the Government of Great Britain in the hostile proceedings which, in the case of the latter, have formed the initiative, if not the basis, of the pending negotiations. In any such "coöperation," even for the specific purpose designated, great caution and discretion would be necessary on our part to avoid the suspicion of officially intermeddling in the domestic affairs of that distant Empire, or of violating our treaty obligations by seeming in the guise of pacific intentions to share in the hostile feelings which precipitated the early stages of the "Chinese Question." As the peaceful relations between our Government and that of China have suffered no interruption, the impropriety, not to say iniquity, of any warlike demonstration on the part of the United States, because a favorable juncture had arisen for the acquisition of ends the most desirable, is too apparent to need anything more than the bare statement of the case to determine the judgment which every candid and equitable mind will pronounce in the premises. Our coöperation with Great Britain and France, if undertaken at all, should be strictly confined to objects within the range of a peaceful diplomacy, and should be prosecuted without in any way or to any degree compromiting the strict neutrality of the United States in the late dispute between England and China. And in this spirit it seems to us that any naval force which our Government may see fit to send to the Chinese waters should be charged only with a pacific mission, and should exclusively avoid the appearance of moving as a member of a "demonstration" to the Chinese authorities, for which proceeding, as we have received no offence, we could find no justification, even that of arbitrary power, pleading, to impose its will on a people likely to be influenced rather by their fears than their reason, which have for it may be proper to consider any justification at all we will not anticipate to say.

We may venture to add, however, that the difficulties which in all probability will attend a solution of the "Chinese Question" appear to us to demand, alike in the interests of American commerce and of American diplomacy, the presence of an able and skillful Ambassador to represent the Government of the United States on the spot where the negotiations will be conducted by the Envoys of England and France; and it is of hardly less importance that the Commander of our Naval forces in the Chinese waters should be (as the present, so far as we know, is) a man at once of equal energy and discretion.

Terrible Shipwrecks on Lake Michigan.

VESSELS WRECKED—MANY LIVES LOST.

From the Chicago Times, 30th.

Another of the terrible marine disasters which have made the name of Chicago dreadful in the ears of all sailors, occurred before this city yesterday. All day, and a good part of the previous night, a furious gale blew from the northeast, bringing all the lake craft which happened to be this side of Milwaukee to this port for safety.

The scow Cygnet, of Allegan, missed the entrance in attempting to make the harbor and went against the breakwater, where her crew, consisting of three or four men, saved themselves by jumping off. It was a perilous undertaking and narrow escape from death.

The fine schooner Gesine, Capt. GERMAN LUNOX, of Manitowoc, was the next vessel to miss the harbor. She cast anchor directly off the foot of Randolph-street, but commenced dragging towards the breakwater immediately. The sea where she lay was truly terrible in its violence and power. Finding that all efforts to make their anchors hold were unavailing, and with what they regarded as the certain prospect of shipwreck against the dreaded breakwater before them, the crew decided to trust to their yawl boat for escape. The boat was lowered, the men, one by one, got into it, and struck out bravely for the spot indicated.

At this juncture, however, one of the Government life-boats made its appearance within the basin. It was dragged over the pier, launched and quickly manned by seven resolute and manly sailors, all men before the mast.

The crew of the life boat, however, miscalculated the strength of the sea against which they had to contend. They approached the yawl so near that a line was thrown on board and made fast. Then the crews of both boats did their best to reach the angle above mentioned, which was the nearest point of safety. It was soon found to be impracticable; both boats were rapidly falling astern. Then the eight men in the yawl were transferred to the life-boat, and the former was cast loose.

When the crew were abandoning the Gesine, a brig, the name of which we could not learn, was also in distress, not far from the north pier. Her anchors were out, but were totally inadequate to hold her against the sea, which was there even more terrible than where the Gesine lay. She drifted rapidly towards the pier head, and was at last thrown against it with such violence as, probably, to stave a hole in her bottom. She immediately commenced sinking. Seeing this, five noble-hearted sailors procured a yawl from the steamer Huron, in which they undertook to reach the wreck to save the perishing crew. The boat was swamped in the attempt, and all on board perished! Five of the bravest and best hearts that ever beat in human bosoms went down battling with the elements to save the lives of their fellow-men.

The wreck of the brig, which had now capsized, was carried rapidly by the piers, and nearly disappeared beneath the waves. None were saved of those who were on board. The number we do not know, but probably eight or nine persons went down with the wreck.

One man who went with the crowd on the breakwater when the crew of the Cygnet escaped, was washed off by a wave and drowned. We could not learn his name. With him, it is estimated that at least fifteen persons lost their lives in the disasters before this city yesterday. A more disastrous storm, in this locality, has not occurred for years.

Kansas Matters—The Geary and Sherrard Difficulty.

A letter from the father of SHERRARD appears in the Winchester (Va.) Republican. It purports to correct errors contained in the St. Louis Democrat in relation to that affair. Mr. SHERRARD says:

"That article contains two paragraphs so abounding in wanton and deliberate misrepresentations and perversions of truth, in regard to the facts and circumstances which led to and attended the murder of my son, the late WILLIAM T. SHERRARD, that I had prepared for the press a somewhat detailed exposition of them—taking it for granted that not even the editor of the St. Louis Democrat would be base enough to give Gov. GEARY or any other man as his authority for such a statement without sufficient warrant. It now appears, however, from a letter of "Ion," the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, dated the 22d inst., and published in that paper of the 24th, that "Gov. GEARY had an interview with Ex-President PIERCE, and utterly disclaimed the authorship of, or any responsibility for, the articles in the St. Louis Democrat," &c.

Under these circumstances, I of course, withhold the publication I had designed to make. In the meantime, however, and while this adjourned question of veracity between Governor GEARY and the St. Louis editor is pending, it may not be amiss to afford the public some light upon the mendacious character of the article alluded to—no matter who is or who is not responsible for its paternity.

In six consecutive lines of the article of the St. Louis paper, as reprinted in the Philadelphia North American and United States Gazette, I find no less than an equal number of separate, distinct, gross and unqualified falsehoods; and so clearly proved to be, without the slightest question or contradiction, by the testimony I refer to—one of the witnesses examined being the chairman of the meeting at which the murder was committed.

This exhibit will enable those who may be permitted to see it elsewhere (for here no such thing is required) to form some idea of the flagrant injustice which has been done to the character of the deceased by the publications in which it has been so grossly and wantonly assailed. Not one in ten of those who have given publicity to those slanders have so far yielded to the claims of truth and justice as to permit their readers to see the conclusive and triumphant refutation of them contained in the proceedings of the public meetings held in Kansas.

The War in Florida.

The following interesting General Order No. 4, dated headquarters of the army, New-York, March 30, 1857, has been issued:

"The General-in-Chief takes pleasure in announcing the satisfaction felt by the Head of the War Department, as well as by himself, in learning, from official reports, the creditable conduct and energy displayed by the troops in various small conflicts with the Indians, as follows, in the order of time:

1. Lieutenant ROBERT C. WOOD, Jr., and his scouting detachment, of the Second Cavalry, pursued an Indian trail for three days, overtook the party near the north fork of the Concho, Texas, Feb. 13, killed three and captured the two survivors, with all the animals and property—a complete success without loss, or serious hurt, to the victors.

2. Sergeant WALTER MCDONALD, with a small detachment of Company D, Second Cavalry, from Camp Verde, Texas, vigorously pursued, and, Feb. 12, successfully attacked a party of hostile Indians—killing four and capturing all their animals. Private MARTIN, of Company D, Second Cavalry, died of wounds then received.

3. Lieut. EDMUND FREEMAN, Fifth Infantry, reconnoitering, with a small party, in the Big Cypress Swamp, near Bowlegs' Town, Florida, was attacked by the Seminoles, March 5, himself, and three of his men severely wounded, and one man killed.

Capt. CASPER L. STEVENSON, 5th Infantry, with his command, called, by express, from Fort Keais, 20 miles distant, came rapidly to the relief of Lieutenant FREEMAN's party, attacked the enemy, and after a gallant skirmish, put them to flight, with an evident loss to the Indians, the extent of which could not be ascertained, owing to the density of the hammock. The loss of the troops was as follows:

KILLED—Privates Chilton, Company G; McKinn, Company I; and McClusky, Company D, 5th Infantry—3. DIED OF WOUNDS—Private Rohmer, Company G, 5th Infantry—1. WOUNDED—Second Lieut. Edmund Freeman, (in the arm severely;) Sergeant Taylor, Company H; Privates Gallagher, Company H; Donnelly, Company K; and Mingle, Company G, 5th Infantry—5.

By command Lieutenant Brevet General SCOTT.

L. THOMAS, Assistant Adjutant General.

Fire and Loss of Life in St. Louis.

From the Republican, March 28.

Yesterday afternoon, about 6¼ o'clock, the persons in the immediate vicinity of Main and Chestnut streets were startled by an explosion. It came from the building used as the gun manufactory of T. G. ALBRIGHT, No. 25 Main-street, three doors north of Chesnut. The explosion was so violent in its character that it had scarcely died away before the brick walls on the east and west ends of the building came down with a terrific crash, and the whole building was soon enveloped in flames. The suddenness of the explosion was attended by loss of life and the maiming and burning of several. One man, supposed to be a German, was picked up dead upon the sidewalk immediately in front of the store. Another man by the name of CUSTER, was in the store at the time making a purchase of a pistol. He was with some difficulty rescued from the burning mass, his face, hands and portions of his body being badly burned. He is a farmer and a resident of St. Charles County, and was in the store in company with a Mr. MYERS; also a resident of that county, who has not been seen since, and whom, it is feared, was lost.

The southern portion of the building was occupied by E. F. KRAFT & Co., hardware merchants, and was separated from the gun store by a wooden partition. This, of course, was lost in the general wreck. Mr. KRAFT, who was in his store at the time, was badly hurt in the bank and other portions of his body by the falling timbers. A drayman who was passing along the street at the time, was thrown off his dray several feet.

The basement story of the building on Commercial street was occupied by SANFORD & CHARLEVILLE as their Meat Depôt, and by MCKAY & HOOD, Produce Dealers, with offices located in the village. In the basement, the contents consisted of the usual stock of a meat store, such as pickled pigs, hams, &c. The loss falls heavily on the proprietors, and, we believe, is not covered by insurance. The loss of the building, between wholesale and retail, and the only insurance that we learned was $7,000.

Trade and Trade Statistics.

From the United States Economist, April 4.

On the occasion of every turn in the market it is the custom of the "commercial papers" to startle the public with the announcement that the "bottom is just about to fall out," that water rots in everything, all railroads are to blow up, all furnaces to blow down, all credit is to perish, all gold to vanish; honor being long since dead, honesty will die completely out, and "darkness be the burier of the dead." Nevertheless, although the fulminations of the Tribune, and the croakings of the Herald breed distrust in the minds of the timid, the headstrong country, as a whole, will prosper with an obstinacy past belief. The string with which the Tribune dates after rain is "Prosperity" only. It sits year after year with dogged patience on the bleak theory of prohibition, amid the fluttering of Mother Cary's chickens, bobbing in the dark pool of special favors, with general rain as a bait; every two or three years, when the money market tightens, it declares it has got a bite, and is about to catch a high tariff. Before its spectacles subside returning ease deprives it of its bait, but not of its patience. The Herald perseveres in a relentless and remorseless strain of evil predictions, and will clearly be right finally, even if it has to sustain the cry until it is echoed by the last trump (not of cards). As an instance of this admirable perseverance we quote from the Herald of January 6, 1850, seven years ago last January:

"For the past eight months every one has been going ahead as rapidly as his capital and credit would carry him, and lately the impetus has become so great that many have got beyond their own control, and must soon bring up on some lee shore, perfect wrecks. It will be a long time before we shall again have such an easy money market as has existed during the past eight months. The receipts of gold may continue large, and the banks may extend to their utmost limits, but all classes are becoming so extended in their operations that the demand for money is likely to increase full as fast, if not faster, than the supply. The ball has commenced rolling, and, as it progresses, will gain such an impetus that it will be impossible to stop it. We have no way of arriving at the increase of private credits, but it is our impression that the aggregate is at least double what it was six months ago. The demand for money must, therefore, soon be comparatively large."

This "impetus" has been sustained now seven years, and the "lee shore" seems to be a sort of Cape Fly-away, the nearer you approach to it, the deeper the water. The "ball" which "commenced rolling" so long since has kept rolling amidst "war," "short harvests," cholera, Kansas, and Presidential canvass, and a very active and healthy motion it seems to enjoy—it is a sort of perpetual motion, like that of our glorious planet round the solar light, presenting, in turn, every side to the vivifying rays. So the country has gone on to increase in numbers and wealth, with a rapidity perfectly astounding, and it is this rapidity of increase which gives color to the croakings; the high figures that represent the sum of the trade, astonish those who do not bear in mind that large imports are the necessary consequence of great production and exports. The Cotton crop, as an instance, is this year worth $300,000,000 cash, against a value of $90,000,000 in 1850. The value exported is $100,000,000 more now than in that year. This is overlooked by the croakers, but when the proceeds of sales return into the country, an outcry about ruinous imports is raised, notwithstanding that the exchanges remain under the actual par, even at this season, when the imports are heavy. Since the above prediction of ruin, the country has expended $600,000,000 in railroads, and the value of capital this day in Wall-street is no higher than it was then. All that expended capital, and far more, has been created by renewed and active industry, which is still prospering, although the current of expenditure has subsided, with every prospect of a speedy and large accumulation of capital that must seek some new outlet.

The Stock market has not changed materially during the week. There exists all the elements of a rise in prices, such as improving intrinsic value in the leading railroads, increasing abundance of money at home and abroad, with every indication of an approaching speculative period. The absorption of floating into fixed capital seems to have been checked for the moment, while everywhere the disposition to create new banks and extend credits is greater than ever, particularly in the South and West. All past experience shows that the multiplication of banks in the interior drives capital to the great centres, and fosters stock

TO THE STOCKHOLDERS OF THE GALENA AND CHICAGO UNION RAILROAD COMPANY.—The Board of Directors of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad Company passed the following resolution on the 24th inst.:

Resolved, That the balance of the second mortgage bonds of this Company (about $1,000,000) remaining unsold on the 1st day of May next, be offered to the Stockholders of the Company until that date, at seventy-five cents on the dollar, each Stockholder being at liberty to subscribe for as many $1,000 bonds as he may choose, without reference to the amount of stock held by him; but should more than enough to make up the amount in the aggregate be more than the amount of bonds unsold on the 1st day of May next, the same shall be apportioned among the subscribers in as equitable a manner as the circumstances of the case will admit of, reference being had to the amount of stock owned by each on that day.

Subscribers will be required to pay for the bonds awarded them respectively, at the office of Messrs. Strachan & Scott, in the City of New-York, or at the office of the Secretary of the Company, in Chicago, Illinois, in drafts on New-York at par, or their equivalent, as follows:

25 per cent on the 1st day of June next.
25 per cent on the 20th day of June next.
25 per cent on the 20th day of July next.
25 per cent on the 1st day of Sept. next.

Full or partial payments for above bonds may, however, be made in advance of the above dates.

Any subscriber may be entitled to receive, from time to time, such number of bonds as the payments made will pay for, the coupon and interest on payments to be equitably adjusted, and so issued.

All subscriptions for bonds must be forwarded to the Secretary of the Company, at Chicago, Illinois, and no subscriptions received after the 1st day of May next will be recognized.

The bonds offered in accordance with the foregoing resolution, are the second mortgage sinking fund bonds of the Company, for $1,000 each, with coupons of $35 each attached, payable on the 1st days of May and November of each year at the American Exchange Bank in the City of New-York, and the principal reimbursable on the 1st day of May, 1867, at the same place.

Annexed hereto you will find a blank subscription paper, which you are requested to fill with such number of bonds as you may desire, and return the same to the undersigned, at this office, without delay.

Office of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad Company, Chicago, March 25, 1857.

FOR SALE—FOR PERMANENT INVESTMENT, 8-percent City and County Bonds. The undersigned offers for sale the following securities:

$50,000 Hancock County (Ill.) 8-per-cent Bonds, dated July 1, 1856, and redeemable at the American Exchange Bank in New-York, July 1, 1876; interest coupons payable semi-annually, on the 1st day of July, at $1,000 each.

$50,000 Warsaw City (Ill.) 8-per-cent Bonds, dated May 1, 1856, and redeemable at the American Exchange Bank, in New-York, May 1, 1876; interest coupons payable Jan. and July 1, $1,000 each.

The above Bonds were issued in conformity with an Act of the State Legislature, authorizing the issue of Bonds to aid in the construction of the Warsaw and Rockport Railroad. The amount of taxable property in the County, for the year 1856, was $4,900,949; taxes, $22,950; population, about 25,000; area in acres, 402,240. The authorized issue by the County is $100,000. The amount of taxable property in the city is $1,000,000; taxes, $3,000; population, 3,000. The authorized issue by the city is $50,000, and no more can be issued, by either the city or County, without an Act of the Legislature, and moreover, by the terms, as that every proposition has been framed to make these bonds unassailable, in point of security, and they cannot be repudiated, under any circumstances. Hancock County is one of the most prosperous in the State, and it is expected that 50 miles of the above road, from Warsaw to Quincy Junction, will be finished and in full operation in sixty days from the present time. I have fully examined the strength of these securities, and have no hesitancy in recommending them to my friends and the public, with the utmost confidence, believing that they will compare with anything in the market, and for a permanent investment, no safer Bonds can be found. For a copy of the act under which these Bonds were issued, and full particulars, apply to
